Boltly go where no game has gone before.

Beam Aboard, Captain.
Your starship is fueled and ready. Your crew is fully trained. You launch from Starport, heading toward the galaxy's core on a hunch. You've been chosen to seek new worlds to colonize. New resources for a homeworld gone stale.

Your navigator zeroes in on a red dwarf star. Long-range scans show three planets: a gas giant, a frozen ice world, and a blue-oceaned paradise that looks just like heaven. A good place to land.

Suddenly a klaxon sounds. "Captain, we're being scanned," says your Science Officer. A giant hologram of a squid-like creature appears on your view screen and hisses, "Prepare to die, air-breathers."
Your space odyssey has just begun.

Explore Strange New Worlds
Land on different planets to collect valuable minerals, lifeform specimens, and artifacts from ancient civilizations. But keep your laser on stun—not all the locals will be glad to see you.

Talk to Aliens
Each alien race, like this Veloxi, has a unique culture, personality, and language. They can give you clues—if you can get them to trust you.

"Standard Orbit, Captain."
From hull-crushing gas giants to frozen dwarves, each star system is unique. Study your sensors carefully—there's a stiff fine for recommending colonization of boiling lava planets.

"If I Were To Design A Computer Game"
Contest

In CGW #64 (October) we asked you to come up with contest ideas. Well, you did great! We received some excellent suggestions (and some stinkers as well). Without a doubt the most popular idea (submitted by a number of you) involved variations on the theme "Design a New Computer Game, Not Another Clone". It seems a lot of you are tired of me-too products and want to see some new ideas out there (a few of you listed SimCity as an example of a good new idea for a computer game). So this month's contest will involve coming up with the best idea for a new computer game.

However the BEST single idea for a contest came from Patrick Buechner of Washington DC. Patrick's idea was clever and will be fun to judge, but we're going to make you wait a month to see it. Look for Patrick's contest winning idea in the January 1990 issue of CGW. Congratulations Patrick! OK, back to the December Contest.

Contest #2
In 200 words or less, submit your idea for a new computer game. Entries will be judged based on originality; feasibility (i.e. is it possible to produce this game on a personal computer operating with normal configuration standards) and marketability (i.e. a hummingbird feeder simulator may be an original idea, but it would not be marketable). Normal configuration standards for your chosen platform will be assumed to be 640K RAM with EGA graphics for IBM (soundboard, joystick, mouse support optional); 1MB RAM Amiga; 1MB RAM Apple II. Entries must be postmarked by January 31, 1990. Winners will be announced in the March 1990 issue. Mail your submissions to:

Contest #2
P.O. Box 4566
Anaheim, CA 92803-4566

The best ideas will be printed in CGW. The reader who submits the very best idea will receive a three year subscription to CGW. This is your chance to tell the companies what kind of games you'd like to see for your computer. Enter early, enter often.

I am pleased to announce that Johnny Wilson has been promoted to the position of Editor of Computer Gaming World. Wilson began his relationship with CGW as a writer in 1982. In October 1986 he joined the magazine full time as Associate Editor.

What does this mean to you, the reader? Will there be changes in the way CGW covers the hobby and industry? Will there be major changes to the format of CGW as a result of this move? No, on both accounts. The reason being that the current direction and format of CGW is already as much Wilson's vision of the magazine as it is mine.

This promotion is, in reality, giving credit where credit is due. As my publisher responsibilities have increased over the past 18 months, by necessity Johnny's responsibilities and authority have grown so that he is now functioning as Editor just as I have been functioning as Publisher and Editor-in-Chief. It is time to formalize what has become a reality.

CGW has gained an unparalleled level of respect and trust in this industry. This is due in no small part to Johnny's untiring efforts in news gathering and accurate analysis which has served not only you the reader, but the whole industry as well. We have always sought, and I believe with some success, to be not only a consumer review magazine, but also a trade style publication that reports on the industry itself. That is why CGW attracts a readership that tends to be upscale and mature (average income $30,000; average age 29.5 years). We believe you want the inside information on the games, the people, and the companies.

Speaking of inside information, that is where Johnny excels. When he became Associate Editor he was quite timid about calling the companies and seeking information (I can hear a number of Press Relations people gasping in disbelief). It's true! But he has learned. These days when a PR person gets the message that Johnny is on the line, she/he is likely to ask themselves "What's going on in my company NOW that I don't know about?"

One of my favorite stories concerning Johnny's ability to get inside information involves the PR person who, after just leaving a meeting in which she learned of a new title her company was going to develop, picked up the latest copy of CGW. Intending to check out Rumor Bag and see what the competition was doing, she read that her company was planning to release the game discussed in the meeting. In another memorable story, a company CEO was polling company investors to see who might have leaked a story printed in CGW, only to discover that he had given us the information himself.

So, what can you expect from CGW now? Just what you have come to expect from us already: the most accurate coverage of the games and the industry to be found anywhere (and nearly always the first to press with that coverage). Congratulations Johnny! Now, I'm taking a few weeks off. Here are the keys, don't forget to put out the trash.

Konami is cooking now, with a hot computer game that gives you complete control of world championship caliber basketball, featuring Chicago, New York, Boston and LA.

From the opening tip, it's 5 on 5, full court, board crashing action, highlighted by blocks, steals, picks, foul shots, 3 point bombs and 3 kinds of slams—the Gorilla, the Rim Rockin' Reverse and the In-Your-Face Jam!

Two can play at this game, or you can challenge the computer. Either way, it'll take all the runnin' and gunnin' you can muster if you hope to savor the taste of victory.

Montreal is probably best known for good food, beautiful mademosielleries, and excellent hockey. I was enjoying some of the Old World cuisine, flirting with an enchanting bi-lingual waitress and planning to see the Montreal Canadiens' hockey club play the Boston Bruins after dinner. I noticed the president of an entertainment software firm and one of his investors entering the crowded restaurant and couldn't resist the temptation to play a diabolical prank on them. Calling to my waitress in my horrendously broken French, I motioned her to my table and whispered my plan into her ear.

The idea was that she would speak only French while serving the executive and would pass along to me, preferably in English, any rumors she happened to overhear. It was foolproof (I got the rumors, didn't I?). After the salad course, she told me that Interplay has signed a licensing deal to produce the first computer role-playing game based on the Lord of the Rings. There have been adventure games and adventure/strategy games, but this is the first licensed Tolkien CRPG. She even overheard a great story about the fact that Dragon Wars was held up more than a week as the programmers chased down one particular bug. They found it after viewing hours of videotape showing the playtesters at work. The "bug" was in the code involving a magic spell called, appropriately enough, "Insect Plague".

By the time the main course arrived, the executive had already marinated his filet mignon with a rumor that Virgin Mastertronic U.K. has acquired the rights to publish Monty Python: The Game. Alas, the US division hasn't yet decided whether to publish it over here or not. He also said that their "Medieval Brigade" is running late in releasing Fulda Gap, a new approach to the hypothetical Central European battle between NATO and Warsaw Pact forces. The reason? They are creating a development system for an entire series of modern military simulations, to be called the Flash Point series. Most people thought they were going to use the Fire Brigade system for Fulda Gap, but it's going to be more user-friendly.

We all left the restaurant in a jovial mood and I tried to flag down a taxi, his investor gave me a business card with some news about Electronic Arts Distribution scribbled on the back. EA will now distribute personal computer versions of Sega Software's Altered Beast, Crackdown, Golden Axe, and Turbo Outrun, while Mindscape will continue to market Shinobi, After Burner and the earlier titles.

On the way to the Forum, the cabbie asked me if I already had my ticket. I said I didn't and he dropped me off on "Scalper's Row" (a popular sidewalk near the Forum). I was immediately intercepted by an enterprising sidewalk salesman who wanted $100 per seat. I hesitated, so he looked nervously from side to side and said, "Look, I'll make it $80 if you can give me a rumor they haven't heard from my local software store." I didn't ask how he knew I was the "Rumor Bag" guy (even painted in "The Canadian's" familiar red, white and blue, the bag over my head is a dead giveaway). I simply told him Psynosis was preparing the ultimate "TV game show" simulation. Entitled The Killing Game Show, it will feature hi-tech combat between all sorts of organic and robotic lifeforms in arenas shaped like ancient temples, organic materials, and mysterious caverns. So, he sold me a ticket and still made a healthy profit.

At the game, I loved the bi-lingual scoreboard. Glenn Wesley was called for "hooking" and they broadcast some neat animation out of the French word, "accrocher". A Quebeccois sitting next to me said something that translates, "Stephan LeBeau hasn't been hooked like that since he played SimCity on his computer." The large fellow in front of him turned around and spouted a torrent of French at him which took a moment for me to understand. The large gentleman was telling him about SimEarth. He'd heard that the new game uses Gaia theory (particularly the work of scientists like James Lovelock and Lynn Margulis) in an interdisciplinary approach to the ways geology, biology, and anthropology connect. He says the designers are trying to do some different climate modeling and are experimenting with different time scales (all the way from geologic eras to the fast-moving ways humans mess up the planet).

"Speaking of ecological contamination," I pipped up, "A new crew called After Shock Entertainment sent me an advanced copy of Space Waste, a fast-moving arcade game with gorgeous VGA graphics that should be published in December by Microillusions."

They said they would watch for it, but they were really more interested in sports games and simulators, so I told them about Electronic Arts' upcoming PGA (Professional Golf Association) licensed product. At least, I told them there was going to be one. I didn't have a lot of details.

Suddenly, the Montreal goalie (Patrick Roy) made a spectacular save. The scoreboard lit up with a pun on the French word for unbelievable—incredible. In turn, the fellow next to me said, "You're not going to believe what SSI's new flight simulator is going to be." He told me that it would be called DragonStrike and would be a dragon flight/combat simulator.

"Are you sure that's not a lot of hot air?" I quipped in my best French. Ducking a left hook, I now know that I either need to improve my French, learn more about the Quebeccois sense of humor, or get padding for my bag. Unbelievable! —CGW

Epyx Files For "Chapter 11" Bankruptcy

On October 19, 1989, Epyx filed for protection from creditors under Chapter 11 Bankruptcy Laws. The hearing is scheduled for December 12, 1989. Informed sources suggest that the move would be a prudent step, since the company should have a pretty fair income stream beginning in a few months and needs temporary protection from its creditors in order to recover. However, some Epyx shareholders have alleged that the company notified them that the most recently scheduled stockholders' meeting had been canceled and then, held a secret meeting. CGW was unable to reach a company spokesperson because the Epyx phone line was disconnected.

Sierra Shows 13th Straight Quarter of Revenue Growth

In an entirely different vein, Sierra On-Line, Inc. reported on October 26, 1989 that it had just completed its thirteenth consecutive quarter with increases in revenue (+ $1,854,000 or 33.25%) and earnings (+ $138,000 or 17.5%). The increase in $0.05 in earnings per share (+ 20%) is significant in that there was almost a full million more shares outstanding during the latest quarter than in the previous year's quarter. The increase itself is even more significant in that Sierra's joint promotion with IBM delayed several significant revenue-producing projects.

Sierra President and CEO Ken Williams has stated that the delay is over and the company is earning (+ $1,854,000 or 33.25%) and earnings (+ $138,000 or 17.5%). The increase in $0.05 in earnings per share (+ 20%) is significant in that there was almost a full million more shares outstanding during the latest quarter than in the previous year's quarter. The increase itself is even more significant in that Sierra's joint promotion with IBM delayed several significant revenue-producing projects.

Sierra President and CEO Ken Williams has stated that the delay is over and the company is currently optimistic about its entertainment products: "Cosmic Osmo (CD-ROM) will be prominently featured at the Winter Consumer Electronics Show, Davis also believes the company's new "Gambit" system, as well as a new Infocom title to be announced in January that may reposition the brand name, will offer unique contributions to the market. Asked if the company will be moving toward entertainment products in a "Windows" environment to take advantage of future multimedia products, Davis simply asked if CGW thought there were "Windows" of opportunity in the MS-DOS world. Without confirming any specific "Windows" products, Davis pointed out Mediagenic's investment in ZSoft software and noted that with Atlanta-based ZSoft's expertise, Mediagenic will have "Windows"-based multimedia products whenever there is a platform. Also, Davis' statement in the divestiture announcement that ZSoft would not be affected by the plan, "It has ZSoft's high-end IBM-compatible graphics and output device support orientation have considerable strategic value to our organization.”

Long Awaited "Harpoon" Nears Arrival

At press time, CGW received a playable copy of Harpoon, the long-awaited game of modern naval combat from Three-Study Pacific. The game was still undergoing a rigorous debugging process, but the promise of a design which would offer a detailed strategic conflict for the groghead and an accessible game for the casual gamer or novice seems to be fulfilled. The detailed database, with commentary by naval warfare expert and best-selling novelist Larry Bond, really exists. The windows-style screen with strategic map, group display and unit detail is functional. In addition, the game offers the versatility to play either NATO or Warsaw Pact sides; utilize possible nuclear disposition; use snorkeling Soviet subs; choose realistic weather; opt for realistic or user-friendly maintenance failure levels; and decide whether to have full ordnance initially available.

Mediagenic Refocuses On Entertainment

Mediagenic has announced plans to divest itself of its two company owned Presentation Tool Publishers in order to concentrate on entertainment products. TenpointO, publishers of Focal Point II and Open III, and Activation Presentation Tools, publishers of Reports, Business Class, Painworks Plus, Painworks Gold, and others, are the two product lines affected. Mediagenic will continue to market the products already developed, but no further research or development is expected.

Currently, Mediagenic is optimistic about its entertainment products: "Cosmic Osmo (CD-ROM) will be prominently featured at the Winter Consumer Electronics Show. Davis also believes the company's new "Gambit" system, as well as a new Infocom title to be announced in January that may reposition the brand name, will offer unique contributions to the market. ARE YOU READY TO STEP INTO INDY'S SHOES?

Move larger-than-life exploits from the movie screen to the computer screen, and the results are often small potatoes. Not so with "Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade." Games that capture the action, excitement, and special effects of the greatest Indy movie of them all. And Indy the game character has all the style, wit, and resourcefulness that make the big lug so lovable in the movie.

Red hot, slam-bam action.
Indy the Action Game delivers classic arcade thrills on a hell-bent chase for the greatest treasure in history—the Holy Grail. As Indy, you'll use your whip, your fists, and your wits. Escaping grave-robbing cutthroats. Pulverizing Gestapo goons. And surviving the lethal trials of the Grail Temple itself.

How's your I.Q.?
In "Indy the Graphic Adventure," you'll find out if you can keep up with the guy with the whip and the hat. Maybe you'll make the same decisions Indy made in the movie. Or score higher I.Q. (Indy Quotient) points by finding subtle or ingenious alternatives. All the while exploring a stunning world of sights, sounds and characters—many of which you didn't see in the film.

Use Lucasfilm's acclaimed—and enhanced—point n' click interface to toss off a sarcastic one-liner, sweet talk your way out of a tight squeeze, or just haul off and slug the sucker. And thumb through Henry Jones' 64-page Grail Diary for precious and fascinating clues.

We made a spectacle of ourselves.
Both games bring you the great graphics, exciting camera angles, and stirring soundtracks that made the Indiana Jones films so special.

Of course, our development team had the advantage of working with the people who made the movie. And that's how we made sure that when you step into Indy's shoes, your feet are planted firmly in the fire.
Here is the latest information on European Christmas game releases. Mention of availability refers to the UK market, however they can be obtained via those addresses listed last month.

The data disk, available now, for the ever-popular Populous has finally arrived on a dual format ST/Amiga disk. Five new worlds are included: Silly Land, Wild West, Revolution Francaise, Block Land (seen in the screenshot), and Bit Plains. Electronic Arts says that each land is tougher to complete than its predecessor and that previous strategies, used with the original scenarios, may not be the best to complete the game. The price of the data disk is half of the original game.

Developed by Eldritch Games, for Electronic Arts, Hound Of Shadow is a combination of (solo) RPG and a text/graphic adventure—a concept developed by Infocom with Journey. Hound Of Shadow (a pre-Christmas release) is based in the Oxford Street/Soho area of the 1920s, the plot owing a great deal to the H.P. Lovecraft style of horror story. The RPG aspect of the game uses Eldritch's "Timeline" system. After answering some questions at the beginning of the game and selecting a relevant profession (which will govern which skills your character will be most adept at), the computer generates a set of statistics according to your answers (shades of Ultima IV). The RPG-type introduction then gives way to an, apparently, standard text/graphic adventure but with puzzles relying more on character interaction rather than object manipulation. In addition, the graphics are black and white/sepia which enhances the atmosphere.

Both of the UK's top adventure houses may have produced their last standard text/graphic adventure. Level 9 (Knight Orc, Lancelot, etc) have announced that their forthcoming adventure, Scapeghost (all formats, pre-Christmas launch), will be their last because, according to Level 9's Pete Austin (one of three brothers who all take part in designing and programming), "People have been declaring the death of the adventure market for years, so Scapeghost is an appropriate final release. It comes from beyond the grave and you play a ghost."

As an ex-cop who knew too much; was efficiently disposed of; and framed for a number of crimes he didn't commit, you return, in spectral form, with the dual aim of clearing your name and seeking revenge upon the villains. Level 9 is now concentrating upon the new H.U.G.E. system (hWolly Universal Games Engine) which is more arcade-oriented and may possibly end up in something of the Zak McKracken mold.

Magnetic Scrolls' (Guild of Thieves, The Pawn, etc) position is open to speculation. However, they are reported to be developing a system which will take them away from standard adventures. If this is so, Myth will be their last adventure. Myth (all formats, available now) is a mini-adventure which was developed specifically for the "Official Secrets" club (more later). It revolves around a rather inept Poseidon, a god of the sea who cannot swim. As he says himself, "Have you any idea how difficult it is to look god-like (Continued on page 101)
It's a Cruise to the Islands. But It's No Vacation.

Forget about relaxing. With 64 islands to capture, you'll barely have time to blink. Especially since a powerful enemy needs the islands' rich energy reserves as desperately as you do.

After all, you can't kick back when you're flying four long-range fighter-bombers by video remote control. Simultaneously. Or maneuvering four amphibious tanks. Or handling laser cannons and fragmentation bombs a hundred miles away. All at the same time.

You can't let your thoughts wander when a mind-boggling information network feeds you a constant stream of crucial data and expects you to respond with the right decisions. Right now.

And you can't sleep late when the free world is counting on you to lace all 64 islands into a mining, manufacturing and supply complex to ease a global energy crisis. The sooner the better.

As a matter of fact, so much is happening so fast in Carrier Command that it's really two games in one. Strategy + Action. And you can choose which aspect of the game you want to emphasize each time you play. Take your vacation later. You'll need the rest.

8 WONDERS OF THE RACING WORLD

1. THE HUMP BACK.
   Lots of little bumps that take their toll. Chassis damage adds up quickly.

2. THE LITTLE RAMP.
   Looks easy enough. The ramp isn't too big. But everyone wants to clear it full speed. They end up kissing dirt 100 feet down.

3. THE STEPPING STONES.
   Speed control is the name of the game — not too fast, not too slow. You'll have to clear four chasms, one after the other.

4. THE BIG RAMP.
   Build up speed for that ramp, but be ready for the landing. It'll rattle your molars. Your chassis can fall apart quickly on this one.

5. THE HIGH JUMP.
   Clearing the ramp is easy. Making it over that monstrosity in the middle is another story.

6. THE ROLLERCOASTER.
   The ride is silky smooth until you hit that slight dip in the road — all 500 feet of it.

7. THE SKI JUMP.
   For elite racers only. Handle this course right, and you're a legend. One small mistake, you're in orbit.

8. THE DRAWBRIDGE.

They're the meanest speedways ever designed. Like rollercoasters from Hell, they twist and climb through empty space without tracks to guide your wheels. Or guard rails to save your neck. In some sections, they don't even have roadway to carry your weight.

Your super-charged car is like a plane without wings. You have only momentum — the perfect combination of speed and steering — to carry you safely across gaping holes in the track. Airborne, you hold on, only hoping that all four tires find the track again — and that the jolt won't be too much for you and your car to handle.

Fast-scrolling screens are so vivid they do everything but blow wind in your face. When the track rises and drops sharply away, the illusion of weightlessness runs straight to your gut. On hairpin turns, you'll find yourself leaning in your chair.

The Eight Wonders of the Racing World. No wonder you can't wait to ride them.

Purgatory stinks. It reeks of the dead and dying among filth-choked streets, decaying buildings, and open-air cesspools. Few survive for long in this noisome parody of a city and those who do quickly lose what humanity they once had. They go mad or prey on the weaker inhabitants, always on the lookout for new blood to bully, beat, or rob. This time, the new blood is you, dumped naked and unarmored into a hell on earth from which, so it's said, there is no escape but death . . .

So begins Dragon Wars, the latest role-playing game from Interplay. No party of adventurers has ever started out in a more unpleasant, hostile environment with so little, which is exactly nothing. No armor, no weapons, no money, no spells. "Nada", as they say on the west coast. It's a chilling thought. Yet, despite the depressing prospects, there is hope. Your situation is far from impossible. For the clever, the brave, and yes, the desperate, there are ways out of this city of the damned, and not necessarily feet first. It all depends on the risks you're willing to take, and how good your party of four is with various skills. The characters who come with the game are a good bet. They form a well-balanced group (although you may want to change their names) and the necessary skills are well-distributed among them. These aren't just demo characters to get you started. They are seriously constructed and carefully planned out personas who are capable of finishing the adventure.

Of course, you may feel happier creating your very own people, instead of using the pre-generated bunch. This is fine, but before doing that, study the others very carefully. Note what skills each one comes with. All of them have a purpose, and some are critical to success in the game. Each new character begins with no skills, and attributes of 10. You have 50 points with which to "buy" attribute increases and skills, not necessarily on a one-for-one basis. How you allocate these points is up to you, but once you're finished, there is no going back to undo something (unless you want to delete the character and start again).

Your third option is to bring over one or more characters from any of the three Bard's Tale games. Don't do it! You won't like the results. Regardless of level, they all come over with physical stats of 16, a couple of skills, and 10 points for skill or attribute increases. This is less than it sounds, especially if the characters transfer with a high level. For mages in particular, this is a problem, as it costs 10 points for each Magic skill beyond Low Magic. The character eats up the points right there, with nothing left over. Since you can expect to finish the game with characters somewhere between 8th and 10th level on average, you see where the problem lies in starting with high-level ones. Their advancement will be very slow, and the precious points gained on level increase (see below) will be few and far between. The only time you might come out ahead with a transferred character is to bring over a low-level fighter. It simply isn't worth bringing over a mage. Overall, you will do better starting with a brand-new group.

Every time a character reaches a new level, he or she receives 2 more points to put into skills or attributes. These points can be used immediately or held onto while you decide where they should go. Level itself does not confer any benefits in combat or spell-casting. It is just a way of marking when you can increase the abilities of the characters. Once you're satisfied with your characters, they are set down in the middle of Purgatory and the game begins. There are many unpleasant people and critters roaming the streets and alleys. Confrontations will be frequent. In a Certain Other Series (heh), this would spell instant doom and aggravation. However, that is not the case here. You don't have to fight unless you really want to (and, at the beginning, you certainly don't!), since all opponents start far enough from the group to allow everyone to run away safely. Expect to do a lot of running as you explore the city. There is, of course, only

Introducing F-15 Strike Eagle II.
The explosive sequel to the best-seller.

F-15 Strike Eagle II is here. And it's non-stop action all the way.
The sequel to F-15 Strike Eagle, the original jet combat game that sold a million copies, F-15 Strike Eagle II combines intense air-to-air combat with the newest breakthroughs in MicroProse game design. An intelligent combat console lets you engage the enemy with the touch of just one button. And the optional "Director" mode automatically selects your best camera angle. So you can concentrate on the action: scorching dogfights with bogies that swarm the sky!

And all the choices are yours. F-15 Strike Eagle II has four levels of difficulty, take-off and landing options, a no-crash mode for novice pilots, even a built-in combat training demo.

All with the sharpest Super 3-D Graphics, unbelievably smooth animation and realistic battle sounds that make the feeling real!

MicroProse is the first, last and best name in combat simulations. We started it all with F-15 Strike Eagle. Now the saga continues with F-15 Strike Eagle II.

After all, who else could improve on a classic?

Features:

Get right into the action! More dogfights and heart-pounding thrills than ever before!

Choose your view from 11 camera angles, or let the computer decide the best perspective!

Somedown near the Wes Dipper, boarding the starship, Ruptured Duck. "Captain, we have an alien vessel approaching from X1.Y2."

The Thrynn navigator hummed in his insect-like buzz. Looking up from another losing chess match with the engineering droid, the captain slowly tuned into this existence. "Huh? Oh...ah, steer clear and open communications. If it's those preachy Tandelou come to convert us again, I'll scream."

When the captain swung around to face the com-screen the Dweenle medic was slouching before him. "Uh, excuse me captain, I know I'm bothering you again and you hate me for it but, I was wondering if you could avoid combat as it makes me very nauseous. Of course, you probably don't care."

"Duodenum, relax a bit, alright? I hate getting shot at as much as you do," he said, wondering if therapy was being wasted on this hopelessly insecure crewmember.

What! Hate combat?! Combat is life! Life is combat! Captain, I suggest we attack at once!" screamed the G'nikk.

"Oh God, who woke her up?", muttered the captain.

"Captain they're not responding to our hail. We are under fire" said Gabby the Elowan with a nervous rustle of her leafy bouffant hair-do.

"Crap! Sasha, raise shields, arm weapons, and steer clear of those plasma bolts...Sasha?...Sasha!" Looking back, the captain could see Sasha taking another whiff on the Gas Slug. "Alright! The Gas Slug's off limits until we return to starbase!"

Sasha slowly emerged from the Gas Slug's euphoria and swung the ship around, just avoiding a plasma bolt and managing with some difficulty to lock the lasers on the enemy flagship.

Electronic Arts' "Starflight 2"

by Chris Lombardi

Sneak Preview

The chaotic situations, crisis upon crisis, the distinctive alien cultures and the creative spark inherent in the introductory fiction are all present in Starflight 2: The Trade Routes of the Cloud Nebula (SF2). SF2 is a sequel to CGW's Hall of Fame member, Starflight. Akin to Lucas' original vision of the Star Wars trilogy, Starflight had a significantly longer story from the outset than could ever possibly be fit into one product. SF2 is just as stimulating as the original.

The player's mission is to: 1) find the source of Shyneum and 2) obtain the Spemin technology.

Achieving the game's objectives is a matter of exploration. As in Starflight, there is plenty of it. The "tiny nibble of universe" to be explored in the game consists of approximately 150 star systems, each with anywhere from zero to eight planets in orbit. Inhabiting many of these systems are 25 races of lifeforms, six of which are space-faring. There is enough here to keep players busy for a long time.

This grand adventure begins at Starport where players create their crewmembers and outfit the ship. In creating a crew, one chooses between the same five races used in Starflight: Humans, Velox, Thrynn, Elowan, and Androids. Each race still has different strengths and weaknesses and creating a balanced crew is still important. One also needs to outfit the ship, though the initial funds available to upgrade it won't buy much. One would think Interstel (no relation to the computer game publisher located in Webster, TX) could manage a bit more, seeing that the goal is to save their skins. But alas, that would leave out a very large part of the adventure.

Before venturing forth to save the free world, players need to max-out their ship's abilities and bolster their ship's race of slime bags (literally). Well, it seems the Spemin have gone off and discovered some bite for their bark. Once just a dangerous nuisance, the Spemin now have powerful new weaponry and an endless supply of the valuable Shyneum fuel. They have issued an ultimatum (actually it's the fourth) demanding the immediate surrender of all the peoples of Arth. The Arthlings have not complied to these demands, knowing how spineless (literally and figuratively) the Spemin actually are. The fear is that the Spemin are gaining more courage with each ultimatum and may attack soon. The player's mission is to:

capabilities. This requires a good deal of cash. Fortunately, there are several ways to earn it. The easiest and quickest way to earn dough is to trade goods between the sentient races in the general vicinity of Starbase. Each race buys and sells certain common items, depending on their technology level, as well as specialty items that are unique to that race. The specialty items are goods but there is a queue to that race. Technology level, as well as specialty items, are available in the general vicinity to earn dough is to trade goods between species that have the tendency to attack and injure crew members. Capturing these creatures requires stunning them with the terrain vehicle's laser. (Hint: A good navigator is a must when on these species as he's the one who fires the gun.)

Mining minerals can also provide a nice supplementary income, but it too has its drawbacks. The upper elevations, where the highest concentrations of minerals can be found, are often the site of foul weather that can injure your crew. Getting caught in an electrical storm 40 klicks from your ship can be a disaster. At any rate, mining can be a good way to pick up a little cash if you're down on fuel.

It's Got Personality!

Solving the game's objectives is also a matter of information gathering. Most information will come from interaction with the half dozen spacefaring sentients. The personalities of these beings, created for the most part by Greg Johnson, are one of the strongest elements of the game. The Dweenle, a depressive, submissive, borderline suicidal race of the coreward, upspin arm of the galaxy, are such a drag to talk to that I personally found myself dreading encounters with them. Also, I had to feel a tad of contempt for the closed-minded, pretentious religiosity of the Eschavara and Eschevoy Tandelou, who happen to be in a bitter battle over the theology surrounding seven (count 'eml) ceremonial practices out of 800,000 in the Thdok-bryg-ahhh religion. These caricatures are wonderful and the game would not be half as good without the color that they provide.

Unfortunately, not all encounters are enriching ones, since a few races would just as soon vaporize one's crew as chat with them. Fortunately, combat is not a major aspect of the game, a refreshing change for the CRPG fan. The combat system is very simple. Once combat is selected from the Navigator's menu, the ship can be maneuvered by means of the keyboard and weapons fired with the space bar. The computer chooses the target and type of weapon (laser or torpedo). Then, the captain's job is simply to steer out of trouble and fire at will. Captains can also purchase "blasto pods", extremely effective weapons that annihilate all in their explosive wake. Effective indeed!

The game interface has not changed much from the original game. It is menu-driven, using the arrow keys and the spacebar to select one's choices. It can be a little clumsy at first but you soon memorize common key sequences and become accustomed to it. Flipping through the ship's inventory can be irritating. The scrolling is slow and, once an item is selected, it resets to the beginning of the list and the player must scroll through the entire inventory again. While the interface is under discussion, the save game procedure should be criticized. The only way to save more than one game position is to use a utility and make a copy of the current save. Should the entire crew be destroyed, the game is over and one must rename these files and restart. This was a conscious design decision that was meant to create more realistic play, and avoid what some call 'unethical gaming' (saving after every advancement and rebooting after every error). Despite the supporting ideology, it is actually a pain.

Let's be honest. We don't play these games for the realistic frustration of defeat. We play them for the exhilaration of success.

The game's graphics are very strong, and in many ways improved over the original game. The planetary landing sequence is especially nice. When orbiting a planet a full view of the rotating globe is shown. Upon choosing to land, a flat topographical map appears with land form elevations represented by varying colors. After choosing the landing site, the planet begins to grow larger until a topographical net is locked-on to the actual landing site. These sequences, which are unique to each planet, were creating using fractal graphic routines created by T.C. Lee.

Freedom Flyer

The greatest strength of the game is the freedom it allows the player. There are a number of paths and playing styles that can lead to the game's conclusion. Personally, I love exploring and spent most of my time checking out practically every star system in the game. Consequently, a lot of my crew's earnings came from recommending planets for colonization, mining and creature collecting. Those who enjoy the trade aspect will probably find and milk one of several lucrative trade routes.

This ability to project one's own personality into the game makes it that much more enjoyable.

The world of Starflight 2 is one of the most colorful worlds ever crammed into a computer. I would recommend this game to any adventure/role-playing mega gamer, especially those burned out on (Continued on page 82)

Only three of his hastily loosed missiles made their target, but those hit with a vengeance. One exploded into one of the Rifleman's autocannon ejection ports, fusing the ejection mechanism. The other missiles both slammed into the radar wing whirling like a propeller above the 'Mech's hunched shoulders. The first explosion froze the mechanism in place. The second blast left the wing hanging by thick electrical cables.

Had enough? Justin demanded silently. As if in reply, the Rifleman twisted its torso again. Its two medium torso lasers and the one remaining autocannon fired on their tormentor. Up and running again, Justin eluded the assault, but knew that he could not hope to avoid disaster forever. He just had to make it worth it.

—Michael A. Stackpole, Warrior: En Garde

Welcome to the Battletech universe. When I first read the scene above and some of the fast-moving battle scenes surrounding it, I was hooked. At game conventions, I had seen dedicated players intent upon winning Battletech in its boardgame incarnation and I had even watched a friend play the Infocom role playing game, Battletech: The Crescent Hawk's Inception, yet this 31st Century "lostech" universe seemed as unreal to me as the "Transformers" in that Japanimation-style television cartoon until I started reading the trilogy.

Suddenly, I realized what the attraction was. These weren't simply huge robots or humanoid tanks slagging (or perhaps, slagging) it out in wars of planetary conquest. Instead, each "BattleMech" was a huge armored humanoid war machine held together with myomer muscles and piloted by the elite warriors of a dying culture, high tech descendents of the age of chivalry. I booted Battletech: The Crescent Hawk's Inception on my Amiga. I invested two nights in play, but somehow it still didn't capture the magic that I was discovering in Stackpole's The Warrior Trilogy [Ed: published in paperback by FASA Corporation] (I know others who feel more positively about the role-playing game).

Then, in the course of preparing last month's "Christmas Buying Guide", we received an advanced copy of MechWarrior and I found what I was looking for. MechWarrior is a BattleMech simulator. It allows players to enter the cockpit of a BattleMech and fight it out like the heroes in the novels. MechWarrior is a real-time simulation (utilizing a choice of joystick- or keyboard driven action) which offers realistic looking 3-D scrolling images of opposing and allied BattleMechs. The story line centers around a displaced noble who is functioning as a mercenary (under an abbreviated name) in order to earn enough C-bills and learn enough information to find a particular artifact and be restored to power. Essentially, MechWarrior offers a role-playing "shell" (i.e. graphic interface) to facilitate the player's trek through the Battletech universe fighting a series of battles. Most battles last about 10 minutes. The player can recruit team members for his mercenary team; purchase and repair his BattleMechs; buy a new 'Mech or sell his old ones; observe what is happening in other parts of the universe through the News Net (events in all the Battletech novels occur at the appropriate times); travel to planets belonging to other "houses"; or request a contract from the "house" which governs the current planet the player's character is on.

Q. What do you get when you mix sharp graphics and sensational sound with unbeatable gameplay?

A. Addicted.

The hit arcade games from Europe, now available in the U.S.!

QUADRALIEN. The mission: Find and destroy the evil Quadraliens who have infested Cybernetic Power Station ASTRA and bring the reactor back under control. Work your way through ASTRA's nineteen chambers with only six droids (each with its own unique feature) to find and destroy the Quadralien Mother Creature. You'll need ingenuity - as well as lasers! - to fight through the aliens and maze-like corridors of ASTRA. Strategic thinking, a puzzle-solving mind, and a quick trigger-finger are all required, so take your time and plan your moves. But you'd better hurry - the temperature's rising toward a meltdown of cosmic proportions!

STARGOOSE. The equipment: The new top secret fighter, codename STARGOOSE, packed to the hilt with every weapon imaginable. The assignment: Steal the power crystals from the eight cities on the planet NOM. But watch out! The rolling landscape is covered with machine gun nests, laser pill boxes, automatic rocket launchers, and pre-programmed robot attack vehicles. Fuel and ammo will go like crazy, so be ready to steal more from the storage tunnels under the cities. Absorb yourself in spectacular 3D graphics, as you climb, dive, dodge and twist your way along the alien landscape. The aliens await your attack. Come back with the jewels or don't come back at all!

New From SPINNAKER
M1 TANK PLATOON

by M. Evan Brooks

The documentation consists of a 200+ page manual, a ten page technical supplement, and the keyboard overlay. Actually, the instructions on how to use the program amount to only thirty pages and the remainder of the manual consists of a tutorial ("training runs") along with a detailed analysis/exposition of modern armor, tactics and vehicular information. The manual is very detailed and successfully introduces the novice to the concepts of armored tactics. However, for the user without the patience to read the entire manual, there are summaries and "quick tips" which allow one to gain a rapid familiarity with the game system without doing the detail work.

For those interested in further reading, the documentation recommends a number of sources as well as noting the military manuals which were most useful. For additional reading, this reviewer would recommend F.W. von Mellenthin's classic Panzer Battles for his experiences and observations on the Russian fighting man and William Baxter's Soviet Air-Land

Battle Tactics for an overview of probable contemporary Soviet tactics.

Graphics

There is no question that the graphics are the best currently available for a tank simulation. Prior armor simulations generally had decent internal (instrumentation) or external graphics. None did both well. M1 Tank Platoon does an excellent job of portraying the internal views of the tank and a very good job of the external environment.

One can shift internally between three out of four positions (driver, gunner and tank commander, but not loader [whose role is rather limited in real life]), as well as among each of one's four tanks. Additionally, one can select the "outside tank" view; similar to the "chase plane" view in flight simulators, this allows one to view the action from the outside and pan a full circle. When combat is initiated and shell explosions begin to precipitate from above, it is fascinating to watch the action in this manner (warning: mesmerization can result in the destruction of one's platoon and supporting elements!).

Smoke is rendered by the polygon-fill technology used by Microprose and appears as gray-black wedges a la Peter Max. Although the wedges may not look realistic, they are functional in portraying the effect of smoke on the battlefield. While a hit vehicle or building may yield secondary and even tertiary explosions (which are quite interesting), close proximity to "the bombs bursting in air" enhances the "Peter Max" effect.

Game Play

Although the program may be installed on a hard drive, it uses both a key disk and a vehicle identification scheme. In what is a commendable user-friendly innovation, one may save his "options" and a vehicle identification scheme. In what is a commendable user-friendly innovation, one may save his "options". Thus, joystick options, color scheme, and sound do not have to be reselected every time—a simple "tank/o" will suffice and it can even omit the introductory screens!

M1 may be placed in either single engagement (blitzkrieg, meeting engagement, hasty attack, assault, defend or rearguard action) or campaign (all missions placed in a chronological context).

mode. One may select opponents as second line, first line, veteran, or guards (elite). Even the second line troops are no push-over and the pell-mell assault without a well-conceived tactical plan is doomed to a quick demise. Designer Arnold Hendrick notes that the largest differential in unit abilities is between second and first line troops. Finally, missions may occur at day, night, or in rain and snow as well as "normal" weather conditions.

For the new user, the defense is strongly recommended. The platoon is usually in a good formation, and the enemy will attack; therefore, the user's mission is to "stay put and kick butt". Even the second-line troops can sometimes present a problem, and the elite troops will generally use an axis of advance that will present real difficulties. Shifting to the gunner position will allow one to personally lay and fire the main gun (selecting either sabot or HEAT thigh explosive anti-tank). Even with a laser range-finder, sighting is an art—the computer automatically accounts for movement of the enemy, but only as long as you are moving the sight to bear directly on the target; eventually, one will learn when and where the appropriate "lead" is.

Even with the laser ranging system, a stationary tank remains a more stable weapons platform than a moving one. In playing the simulation, one does not portray any particular person in the platoon. Rather, the player is the "spirit" of the platoon. One can shift among the positions, but this reviewer notes that certain positions are more "useable" than others. The driver will be used to verify the "hull-down" position of the tank; by switching between driver and gunner, one can put the vehicle into a hull defilade position on the defensive. This presents a smaller target and is essential for survival on the battlefield. Also, one can achieve approximately a ten percent speed increase over the computer by directly accessing the driver. The tank commander is used for spotting enemy concentrations and possibly engaging light targets and air elements; it is difficult to bring down a Hind helicopter, but it can be done. The gunner is where the action occurs, and assuming one wants to "get down and dirty", the gunner station will see the action.

Beginning with a tank platoon of "fair quality", battlefield success will yield a maximum of three promotions and three decorations. Each promotion/decoration can raise a crew member's expertise level (inept-poor-fair-good-superior-expert). Taking an inexperienced platoon and raising it to a "killer team" will take many missions. However, frustration can occur when one's elite team is killed and retraining has to start ab initio. If at least one crew member survives the mission, then the user can simply elect to reboot and the mission will be "erased"; however, if the platoon is wiped out, it is too late. To avoid this, one may save the following files via DOS commands to a separate disk (PACT, ROSTER, OPTS); this is not mentioned in the documentation and is in fact a "semi-cheat". Then again, the computer won't know and who will tell?

While historical experience shows that tank engagements usually occur at less than 500 meters, contemporary weaponry is expected to engage at much farther distances. With M1, one can engage out to 2300 meters or greater. This reviewer scored a kill on a BMP at 4200 meters, although it was a lucky shot. The more lethal the range and Pk (probability of kill), the more likelihood of survival on the battlefield. While a scale is not given on the strategic map, it is eight kilometers square. The West European battlefield will rarely have the semi-open ranges depicted herein, since it is so heavily populated, but the game battlefield was designed for playability as well.

TACTICAL SUGGESTIONS

Use of support elements: As a key to success, air, artillery and infantry can often win the battle by themselves or at least place victory within the player's grasp. Also, while their loss may impact on one's rating, it is not a severe drain. Thus, remember—"they were expendable". Often, air support (A-10 aircraft and gunship/recon helicopters) are somewhat reticent to engage. One can't do anything about this except gripe about the "wimpy pilots"; don't worry—this occurs in real-life more than in the game!

Use of smoke: Smoking may be hazardous to your health, but lack of smoke...

"Once again I find my realm indebted to your family. I hope the Federated Suns is ever worthy of your courage and sacrifice."

—Hanse Davion to Justin Xiang
Allard in Michael A. Stackpole's Warrior: En Garde

The game begins with the player's character located on a random planet belonging to one of the five houses (i.e. dynasties) which rule surviving portions (successor states) of the once great Star League (Davion, Kurita, Liao, Marik or Steiner). He has a Jenner which needs to be repaired and a token amount of money. There are a few clues to be gleaned toward solving the story line on this planet, but to follow up on the clues, the player will have to successfully complete some mercenary missions and earn enough money to upgrade his 'Mech, recruit a crew, and travel off planet. Then, he can continue with the story.

The fact is, many players will become so enamored with battling enemy 'Mechs in the mercenary missions that they will forget the story line and simply fight on behalf of their randomly assigned loyalty. Of course, fighting on behalf of one house means that the character is building up hostility on behalf of other houses. You can't keep destroying Marik fuel dumps and salvaging Marik 'Mechs on behalf of House Kurita (The Draconis Combine) without incurring the wrath of the Free World's League (House Marik). So, if your character needs to travel to one of another house's planets after several mercenary missions against those very planets, he will get a very chilly reception.

Players request mercenary missions by clicking the pointer beside the icon representing the particular planet's ruling house (Not all planets have missions available, but all the initial start planets have a selection of potential missions). There is usually a good mix of potential missions available. Players can use their 'Mechs to defend bases, fuel dumps, communications centers and the like; pilot their 'Mechs in diversionary assaults; or fight their 'Mechs through enemy machines until they recover lost equipment and/or hostages. The difficulty of each mission increases proportionately to the player character's experience, upgrades in equipment, and team recruitment.

It is a good idea to page through the potential contracts and select the missions which are potentially either the most profitable or the most winnable. Each contract will give: an approximation of the enemy's mechanized strength (broken down into categories reflecting the number of Heavy, Medium or Light 'Mech units), a percentage rate which reflects the mercenary team's "cut" of any salvageable 'Mechs they should happen to bring back, and the base fee for successful completion of the mission.

Once the preliminaries are taken care of, the player is provided with an "out-the-cockpit" view as though he were on one of the command couches inside a Battle-Mech. The outside landscape is rendered in polygon-filled graphics, but the terrain features and colors are consistent with the type of planet the mercenaries happen to be fighting on (in fact, even the enemy 'Mechs. If the mercenary team has more than one member, the player can access a command screen in order to give orders to the other team members. They can be allowed to act on their own, ordered to move to avoid; commanded to defend; placed optimally for an ambush; or directed to charge head-on for an all-out attack.

Justin almost laughed aloud. Yes, how stupid of me not to have seen it sooner . . . Wolfson almost fried himself running after me while firing wildly like that. Justin flexed the Centurion's left hand and looked at the gleaming blades on the last three fingers. Smiling to himself, Justin turned his 'Mech in the direction of the Rifleman.

After a hiatus of many months without a significant release, SubLOGIC, publisher and developer of cutting edge flight simulators has released (or is about to release) a number of new and interesting flight simulator products.

Microsoft Flight Simulator 4.0

Developed by subLOGIC and licensed to Microsoft, Microsoft Flight Simulator 4.0 (FS4.0) was released in September. Improvements in FS4.0 include the ability to adjust flight characteristics and create experimental aircraft; the inclusion of a sailplane; random weather variations and updrafts have been added; additional aircraft fly in your airspace; spot mode view direction can be changed from the keyboard; Approach lighting systems have been added (they look great on night approaches); air traffic control communications have been added; and last but not least, improved aircraft flight characteristics.

The "improved flight characteristics and the dynamic weather makes both level flight and landing more difficult. However you can defeat these new features if you wish.

"Pilots" with 386 machines now have custom 386 modules that make the program run faster by using 386 microprocessor-specific instructions. However, the one acknowledged bug in the program affects only 386 users. Near the end of the demo program the EPIS navigation module activates. If you go on to fly the simulation after this, the program can lockup on 386 machines. The official fix (given by Microsoft) is as follows:

1. Rename FS4.EXE to FS4.OLD
2. Type "DEBUG FS4.OLD". Don't type the quotes.
3. At the "-" prompt, type "ECS:B33C 90 90 90 90 90".
4. Type the letter "W", hit return, type the letter "Q", hit return. This writes the change to FS4.OLD.
5. Rename FS4.OLD to FS4.EXE and run the program.

Many Microsoft Flight Simulator 3.0 owners are miffed that Microsoft has not provided for an upgrade policy from 3.0 to 4.0. The debate on online services such as PRODIGY personal service and Compuserve has been lively.

When asked, Microsoft customer support explained that FS4 is different enough from 3.0 that new documentation was required. The cost of upgrading with new documentation would not be significantly less than the purchase price of the new product. Therefore they did not institute an upgrade policy on FS4.0. For the record: other computer entertainment companies have offered upgrade policies on new versions of entertainment products. For example each of the following products were upgraded with complete new packages: Electronic Arts - Earl Weaver 1.5 ($17) and Chuck Yeager 2.0 ($24); Mindscape - Balance of Power 1990 ($25); and Strategic Simulations, Inc. - President Elect 1988 ($10). When one realizes that computer gamers do not make up the bread and butter customers of Microsoft (as they do for these other companies), we begin to understand Microsoft's attitude, even if we do not agree with it.

In the computer entertainment industry there is an informal rule that determines (Continued on page 32)

the value of a product: if the product gives you one hour of playing time per dollar spent it is worth the price. By that formula FS4 is, without a doubt, an exceptional buy in computer entertainment. FS4 is available for the IBM ($59.95 retail).

Hawaiian Odyssey

Hawaiian Odyssey (HO) is an add-on disk to any of the subLOGIC designed flight simulation programs (Flight Simulator II, Microsoft Flight Simulator, Jet, Stealth Mission, UFO or the IBM version of ThunderChopper). Not only does HO add the magnificent Hawaiian Islands to the subLOGIC collection of scenery databases, it also includes some very interesting "fantasy" scenery and a structured adventure.

In the adventure you must find and follow an intricate set of clues scattered about the Hawaiian Islands that lead you to your goal: the secret jewel of the goddess Pele. Even if you determine the hidden jewel's location, you may not succeed. The jewel is only visible under certain strict conditions. Make a mistake during your final approach and you may get lost forever.

The fantasy scenery places you in some very unique locations. The most interesting of which include a kitchen and a piano. Picture yourself in a fly-sized Cessna and you will begin to understand.

Glide across the keyboard, power up and fly into the kitchen, buzz the range and land on the kitchen counter (don't crash into the drawers!). Hawaiian Odyssey is or will be available for the IBM, Atari ST, Amiga, Apple II and Macintosh computers for $29.95.

Instant Facilities Locator

Instant Facilities Locator (IFL) is a time saver for the serious Flight Simulator 3.0/4.0 user. With IFL you can quickly and easily load any location in your database of SubLOGIC scenery disks (obviously, IFL only works with hard disks). After installation, IFL becomes item 3 on the NAV/COM menu. When you access IFL, you simply type in the name of the location you wish to be transported to. The program performs a binary-chop search to narrow down your request (i.e. each keystroke accesses locations beginning with that sequence). In most cases three keystrokes will either access your location or get you very close on the display list.

There is a small file "bug" in using IFL with the new 4.0 version of the Flight Simulator. After installing IFL on your hard disk you will need to rename CONFIG.FS3 to CONFIG.FS4 in the subdirectory containing IFL. Otherwise, the IFL option will not appear on the NAV/COM menu.

Although IFL is a nice convenience, at $39.95 retail its market will be limited to a small, but dedicated, group of Flight Simulator 3.0/4.0 "power users".

Scenery Disk #9

SubLOGIC's newest scenery disk covers the Chicago, St.Louis, and Cincinnati sectional areas in wonderful 3D detail. Over 150 airports are included (many with Visual Approach Slope Indicator landing light systems). The city of Chicago is rendered in much greater detail than in previous products. The St.Louis sectional includes the Gateway Arch which you can add to the list of spans you've flown under (you HAVE flown under the Golden Gate Bridge haven't you?). The Cincinnati region also includes more than thirty mountains in the Allegheny region stretching from Clinch Mountain, Tennessee through Shenandoah National Park, Virginia to Laurel Hill, Pennsylvania. The Ohio River is navigable from Wheeling, West Virginia through Cincinnati and Louisville, Kentucky to it's confluence with the Mississippi at Cairo, Illinois. Disk #9 is or will be available for the IBM, Atari ST, Amiga, and Macintosh computers for $29.95.

In 1942, the blood red rising sun of the Japanese Empire had spread undaunted across the Pacific basin like a crimson stain. American seapower was at its modern nadir, struggling to rebuild from the debacle at Pearl Harbor and the recent stalemate in the Coral Sea. From a position of decided strength, the Japanese High Command, under the guidance of Admiral Yamamoto, pondered their strategic options. Three distinct courses of action were under consideration: a westward thrust into the Indian Ocean; a drive to the south to threaten Australia and New Guinea; or an easterly push toward Midway and Pearl Harbor. An American initiative, namely the Doolittle raid on mainland Japan, precipitated a decision for the latter option. A battle force of over 140 ships, including four front line and four light carriers, was assembled and given orders to neutralize the centrally located island of Midway.

Unbeknownst to the Japanese, American intelligence assets had already cracked the Japanese code. As such, Admiral Nimitz was able to hastily prepare an ambush for the coming onslaught. Utilizing his three remaining carriers, Enterprise, Hornet and Yorktown, Nimitz ordered all of his assets to sally forth and take the battle to the enemy. Privately, the Admiral had little hope for their success. Despite seemingly insurmountable odds, the American Task Group succeeded in destroying Japan’s Carrier Group and seemingly insurmountable, the Admiral, under the guidance of Admiral Yamamoto, pondered at Midway.

Abort the operation. This victory did more than any other in the war and came to be known, rightfully so, as the "Miracle at Midway".

Midway: The Battle That Doomed Japan is an operational level simulation of the conflict that forces players to appreciate the difficulty faced by Admiral Nimitz and his task force. All major surface combatants, above destroyer size escorts, are represented, as well as all sea and land based air wings. The exclusion of the smaller ships may irk some purists, but all things considered, their impact on the outcome of the battle was insignificant. Furthermore, by excluding them, the designer has focused players upon the objectives and made for a more evenly paced, cohesive game.

Doolittle raid on mainland Japan, precipitated a decision for the latter option. A battle force of over 140 ships, including four front line and four light carriers, was assembled and given orders to neutralize the centrally located island of Midway.

Players have the option of conducting searches every turn, weather permitting, and must determine the offensive/defensive mix of their air wings. Once an offensive strike has been planned, aircraft must be readied (fueled and pre-flighted), prepared (ordinance load out), and launched. All of these operations require time in the confined space of a flight deck and, therein lies the essence. Proper timing of air strikes involves attempting to catch the enemy carriers with loaded planes on deck (thereby obtaining secondary explosions and damage from their own fuel and bombs) or managing to reach them while their aircraft are off on another strike (hopefully, not against your carrier). The latter option is just as powerful as the first because the enemy aircraft are often unable to land on another carrier or "bingo" to a friendly base ashore.

Further complications for air operations involve deteriorated weather, battle damage and wind speed limitations. As a result, proper...

Charles Ardai takes a break from the grueling task of writing short stories for Isaac Asimov's Science Fiction Magazine and Ellery Queen's Mystery Magazine in order to pen the first in a series of reviews for CGW on "Interactive Movies".

Ms. Pac-Man, i.e. it consists of a half-dozen arcade-style action sequences separated by animated 'interludes' [Ed: In Ms. Pac-Man, the animated sequences occur every few levels]. The animation comes as a reward, in effect, for success-say the movie segments, are just there for the player's enjoyment: sit back and watch. Look at the gorgeous graphics. Listen to the soundtrack.

The problem with this lies on a psychological level. Traditionally, the animated sequences in games like Pac-Man were bonuses. Sure, they were nice, but they were just icing on the cake. The cake was what you paid your quarter for.

In an Interactive Movie, it is the adventure that players "pay" for. If there are action sequences to boot— as in Manhunter or Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade: The Graphic Adventure they are the bonus. However, the format of David Wolf is such that players are asked to accept the material that induced them to buy the game, the secret-agent graphics and story, presented in a style traditionally reserved for 'icing'. In other words, players expect spy cake with cinematic-sequence icing. What they get is cinematic cake with game icing. This will very likely disappoint some players, which is why I feel obliged to spell it out here. This way, at least, you'll know what you're getting.

Frankly, David Wolf, Secret Agent is not an Interactive Movie. It is, at times, interactive and it is, at times, a movie, but never both at once. Players can in no way affect the plot. They can merely advance it or fail to advance it. Whether this is worth a player's time depends on two factors: how good the action sequences are in and of themselves, and how good the movie is, as a movie.

Of the action sequences, two are car chases, two are air chases (hang-glider and stealth bomber), and two are connected to jumping out of a plane (freefall and landing on the back of a truck). Out of these, the car chases suffer the most from lack of originality; even though the

Life in the Fast Frame

Origin's "Space Rogue"

by Omar DeWitt

The Manchi fighter jumped me just as I emerged from the wormhole. A glance at the TAC display told me that the space scum was trying to ram me. Worse than that, it told me he was only 231 meters away! I hit the accelerator button as I jammed the joystick to the left. The Dart flashed by, I yanked the stick to follow and scored a hit with the laser. It disappeared. Following the targeting info on the screen, I sighted the Dart again and got a few more laser hits while taking a hit on my forward screen. The TAC display showed his armor to be below 100, so I finished him off with a SM-1.

It turned out there was a 63 Credit bounty on that ship. Big deal! It might cover the repairs on my armor. After setting the autopilot, I soon was approaching the dock at Danube Prime Starbase. Another Manchi started an attack run! My armor was wearing thin by now, so I used my last Nova heat-seeking missile. More space debris. After docking, I thought about going to the Cantina for a "Green Head", but . . .

I decided to walk to the kitchen for a Coke®. Maybe I’m getting too old for this kind of life. Bounty hunting, shoot-outs, smuggling, piracy, trading and intrigue are all part of Space Rogue. The path a player follows to fame and glory is wide open, but life is hard in the "Far Arms" star cluster and none of the paths is easy.

Choosing A Career

Players who feel like they're "Top Gun" material might try bounty hunting. The credits to be earned by knocking off the odd Manchi fighter should keep one's ship in repair and allow an occasional weapons upgrade.

One doesn't have to buy fuel or food (and laser weapons never run out of ammunition), so a good pilot should eventually end up with an awesome ship. However, a pilot has to be very good to survive in combat with only his laser. Missiles are great but they will cost "Credits".

Some players will feel like "Piracy" is a good career choice. It can be lucrative, but since a well-equipped ship is almost a necessity, it should probably not be attempted in the early stages of the game.

The documentation suggests trading as the best initial occupation. It certainly is not an easy way to start, however. Valuable items are not often available and the prices to be offered for one's cargo are quite often less than that paid at another port. The result is that success in trading is due more to luck than to planning. The only thing a trader can be sure of is that if the goods he buys can spoil, they will spoil. The trader will also have to contend with Manchi fighters (the Manchi make Genghis Khan and his hordes look like a Boy Scout Jamboree) and pirates—just two other ways to lose a cargo.

Fortunately, since there are no levels of difficulty to choose from in Space Rogue, the play balance is built in and the early Manchi fighters to be faced are only so much laser-fodder. However, as the player's kill rate goes up, so does the quality of the opposition. Nevertheless, there are no easy profits for the novice trader.

Life and Death in Far Arm

The Far Arm is comprised of eight solar systems. Each solar system has only one or two stations, making trading within a system either very limited or totally non-existent. Traveling within each system is done on autopilot only, although the trip can be rudely interrupted by other spacecraft. The solar systems themselves, however, are linked by "wormholes". The spacecraft is maneuvered into a Milar Gate (players discover the location of these by experience) and through a twisting, turning series of circles. The spacecraft that does not stay within the circles is sent back to the entry gate. The longer the craft stays in the wormhole, the more armor is removed from the ship until the sweet smell of cinnamon tells the player it is time to reboot.

To this player, the sequence is like finding the "Chief" in Seven Cities of Gold. It is interesting the first few times, but soon turns into mere busy-work. On a scale of one to ten, the fun factor drops to negative three after the first few tries. If only there were a way to toggle the sequence and get on with the game.

Once the pilot reaches a given station, it is possible to trade, repair the ship, and talk to the people or robots who inhabit the station. The pilot's side of the conversation is limited to the choices offered on the screen, but the information learned is necessary to fully succeed in the game.

In The End . . .

This is not a game for the "junior joystick" class. If they survive the Manchi fighters, they must still negotiate the wormholes into another solar system. On the other hand, there is always the danger that real joystick jockeys may get impatient with the trading and "social interaction" needed for success in Space Rogue. Regardless, Space Rogue is an interesting blend of arcade action, role-playing interaction and economic strategy.

Scorpion's Mail

Ho ho ho! Wow, it's that time of the year again already! Our Christmas Tree Monster is back in his corner, tinsel swishing and lights blinking. Fred has his shrunken-head garland up over the mantel piece as usual (no, you really don't want to take a close look at it), and the place is piled high with gaily-wrapped presents that look suspiciously like computer game boxes. Let's step out of the rush into the back room, where things are a bit more peaceful.

Before we get on to the hints, I must tell you about a serious matter regarding the US Mail. At the end of September, I found a letter from the Postal Service in my box, directing me to call at the window for held mail. As it turned out, a postal employee had been arrested for theft of mail. Apparently he had been taking various letters and ripping them open, hoping to find cash inside.

When caught, he had on him a letter addressed to me from a CGW reader. The contents, luckily, were intact; I was allowed to take those, although the Post Office kept the original envelope as evidence. Unfortunately, they could not tell me how long this had been going on, or if this person had previously stolen other mail addressed to me; the one letter was all they found.

So there is a possibility that some letters sent to me ended up in the trash instead of my box, courtesy of this person. It isn't definite, only possible. However, if you wrote to me any time in September or before, and never received a response, this may be the explanation.

Okay, let's get on to a more pleasant subject here, and see what's in the bag this month.

Manhunter: San Francisco:

Some people have been wondering why they can't get into certain places (such as the laundry). The answer is simple: it isn't time yet. Don't expect to be able to get in somewhere the first time you find it. If nothing works to get you in, then leave the place for now and come back another day. Also, keep in mind that the progression of days is linked mainly to where you have been (even if you couldn't get in), so you must visit the locations picked up by the tracker.

King's Quest IV:

Having found the elusive bridle, a few folks are having difficulties in getting it on the unicorn. You can't just walk up to it and slip the bridle on; as the unicorn (rightly!) doesn't quite trust you. So you need a way to make him like you.

Wizardry IV:

A reader told me that he had read in Quest For Clues II that all he needed to complete one ending of Werdna was the crystal rose. This is not correct. You need more than the rose. In fact, you need all the items obtainable at the inn. Without those, you cannot finish the "political" ending of the game (the reader mentioned above was having a hard time, as might be expected, but I think he's ok now).

Wizardry V:

Several letters lately have inquired about the mysterious chained door on level two. I never found a key for it myself, but it doesn't really matter. You can reach the area behind the door from a stairway on level three. Of course, finding the right stairs is up to you (grin). However, when you can deal with the vanishing spirit, you'll know you found the right place.

Wasteland:

Some readers have found Faran Brygo to be reclusive. Having visited him once, they are unable to see him a second time. Well, that's how it's supposed to be. Once is enough to obtain the information he has; there is no way (at least that I know of) to talk to him again. So after you've seen him once, just go your merry way, as there are more important things yet to be done in the game. Also, a reminder that the hatches in Darwin Base are only red herrings; there is nothing in them (except monsters) and you can't get into them yourself. They are best left alone.

Tangled Tales:

Much to my surprise, there are folks out there having trouble with the "magic word". Now really, it's not that hard. I'll bet your own moms have reminded (maybe even nagged) you about it when you were a kid (maybe even when you (Continued on page 97)

A-10 Tank Killer

A-10 Tank Killer is the first flight simulation to feature the Air Force's much-maligned close air support weapon, the Thunderbolt (better known as the Warthog). Sometimes known as "Death from Above" (with apologies to the Airborne), this plane is capable of destroying any tank in the world. The Army loves it, while the Air Force would like to see it disappear.

While close air support is a military necessity, it is not the "glory" role that the Air Force envisions. Instead, it is a dirty vicious mission which may well be determinative of victory. Now, no matter how much the Air Force dislikes the A-10 and no matter how much the Army would like to add it to its own inventory, the Key West Agreement (1948—which stipulates the respective spheres of the Army and the former Army Air Corps) keeps the planes under Air Force jurisdiction. Note that in Vietnam, helicopters were strictly Army vehicles due to Air Force indifference and hostility to close air support (for an interesting fictional treatment of these turf battles, cf. W.E.B. Griffin's Brotherhood of War series).

Documentation

The documentation is adequate but sparse—a manual (43 pages) and a reference card (which interestingly enough, omits some of the keyboard controls noted on pages 8-9 of the manual). This reviewer's first impression was that the manual was insufficient. However, a careful perusal of the manual did reveal complete game mechanics, buttressed by numerous screen shots and tactical guidance. This is primarily because the game emphasizes an on-hands experience and not an intellectual gestalt.

Graphics

A-10 relies heavily on digitized photographs—the credits even list the actors who portrayed the "pilots". This reviewer was somewhat nonplussed by the heavy use of digitization and looks at it with a sense of foreboding. While digitization may well lead to interesting screen shots (e.g., the instrumentation panel is extremely well done), it does consume large amounts of memory. Is there a tendency to substitute digitization for programming? Apparently not, since A-10 offers an excellent program in addition to the digitized pictures.

The digitization is impressive. Basic weapon loads shift before his eyes as the user makes a choice (preparatory attack, general purpose, insurgency, etc.). One is restricted to the program loads, but this was a design choice. Generally, one particular load is recommended.

The explosion sequences of A-10 are superb. Hitting an enemy tank will yield a crimson fireball wending its way into the sky. It looks real! Not since Battlehawks: 1942 have scenes of destruction been so well executed.

Game Play

A-10 is the first product reviewed by this reviewer that was not initially playable on his machine. With a CompuAdd 386 20 MHz, A-10 simply was too fast—a slight touch to the joystick was sufficient to wing over into the ground. In fact, use of the rudder was the only way to achieve any sort of controlled turn mode.

It was also difficult to maintain a stable altitude. Due to these limitations, Avenger gun target acquisition was not possible, and maneuverability suffered greatly. Slowing down to an 8 MHz (1 wait state) yielded a "clunker". Discussions with other users have revealed that A-10 would seem to be optimized for a 286 12 MHz machine. Fortunately, Dynamix, a young company (virtually all company employees are under 30; Mario Savio is alive and well and working in Oregon!), has taken note of this problem and will issue a revised version. If the program runs too quickly on a machine, Version 2.0 will allow a toggle switch for slow-down purposes (Shift-1 through 9). The A-10 remains a frisky plane, subject to quick auguring into the ground, but such is the life of the close air support pilot. If a user has the first version (so noted by corporate receipt of the registration with the notation "Upgrade". Alternatively, one may download the revision from Dynamix's BBS (503-687-8497). Designer Damon Slye notes that Version 2.0 will correct the difficulties of playing the game on disk with an AdLib sound board, which some gamers discovered (although those using hard drives had no problem with the AdLib board).

Also, if the program is running too slowly, a detail window can be accessed which "speeds up" the simulation, but at some sacrifice in depth. This type of attention to detail is appreciated by the user.

Dynamix emphasizes the playability of A-10, stressing its "feel"

Meet the newest James Bond. You!

James Bond is back with a vengeance in Licence to Kill, the movie. But in this adventure, you're the star.

The powerful drug czar Sanchez has murdered your best friend's bride. So you're out to take him down. Show no mercy as you battle him on land, at sea and in the air.

You'll need to take the controls of helicopters, planes and tankers. Perform death-defying stunts in midair. Even water-ski in your bare feet!

Critics are already raving about this exciting new 007 game.

"All sections are nicely designed, and faithfully follow scenes from the film—just like a movie licence should." • Computer & Video magazine

"At last, a Bond game that will be appreciated by 007 fans and arcade addicts alike." • The One magazine

Licence to Kill. It's a killer game!

ACTION STATIONS! is a high-fidelity simulation of naval surface tactical combat between 1922-1945. Battleships, cruisers, destroyers, shore batteries, merchant vessels (over 180 ship classes!) engage in fierce, authentically-detailed naval actions in the Pacific, Atlantic and Mediterranean.

THIS IS NOT A TOY! This is the type of simulation professional naval officers used at the Naval War College for training and analysis of naval tactics and policy. 4 disks and a 160 page manual and 30 scenarios provide you with a comprehensive treatment of War At Sea.

FEATURES:
- EASY TO PLAY — An effortless menu system allows you complete control of your forces.
- SIMPLE OR SOPHISTICATED — Take full command, or delegate to "computer subordinates".
- AUTHENTIC SCROLLING BATTLE PLOT tracks your forces and enemy units. What you would expect in a ship's Combat Information Center.

A WILY, CUNNING COMPUTER OPPONENT, OR PLAY A FRIEND, 7 LEVELS OF DIFFICULTY.

- 21 DISPLAYS/STATUS BOARDS — Clear, instant access to information on individual units and your entire fleet.
- DETAILED, THOROUGH TREATMENT of smoke, starshells, flares, searchlights, radar, shore batteries, stack gases, aircraft recces and spotting, burning oil slicks, capsized hulls, weather, MORE!
- ACCURATE "DETECT TO ENGAGE" SEQUENCING for gunnery. Local control or by gun director, manual or automatic.
- TORPEDO FIRE CONTROL COMPUTER — Authentic "torpedo spreads", tracked to less than a yard.

COMMAND SHIPS INDIVIDUALLY OR IN FORMATIONS.

- SHIPS ARE MODELED EXHAUSTIVELY — 42 hit zones, 14 armor locations, list and stability, counterflooding, fires, breakdowns and repairs, damage control, engineering capabilities, flooded or exploding maga zones, much, much more.

4 MISSION TYPES: STRIKE, BATTLE, ESCORT, RAID

- BUILD SCENARIO capability to make your own scenarios. GENERATE SCENARIO program allows you to direct the computer to create an infinite number of new situations! Plus a SAVE GAME feature to store games in progress.
- SHIP CLASSES — Super battleships to PT Boats! U.S., German, British, Italian, Japanese, French, Dutch, and Russian fleet units. Many "design only" classes — the German H-44, Japanese Kii, American IV-2 and Montana, much more.

Conclusions

A-10 has much going for it. It is easy-to-use, attractive and fun. This is not a flight grognard's game, but if you are looking for a game which you can shake out of the box, boot up, and have a great deal of fun with, then A-10 (Version 2.0) qualifies.

Review

Note: The writer of dis review would like to thank da wonderful, kind, intelligent, and generous members of da honorable local chapter of the Cement Shoemakers Guild of America for da helpful assistance which dey didn't necessarily provide, but which if dey had provided would have been most valuable.

Moidah Club (Ed.: Murder Club) is Kyodai's entry in dat long line of gumshoe potboilers such as Detective, Suspect, Twilight's Ransom, etc. and it poifectly recreates the challenge of real-life investigative work. As detective J. B. Harold, da player inherits Liberty City's "most baffling moidah investigation", which, until his most unfortunate heart attack, had been handled by Harold's partner.

It seems dat local big fish in a small pond, Bill Robbins—womanizer, corporate shark extraordinaire—was found dead. To wit, dis pooticular pot-son was found stabbed in da back, having been obsoived by a security guard who saw little moih dan a blue car screeching off in the distance.

"Tell 'em about da coroner, Dennis!"

"At present," the coroner's report says, "the investigation is concentrating on the theory that Robbins was killed for reasons related to work or some personal grudge held against him." Unfortunately, as the player will soon find out, practically everyone to be interviewed has something they didn't like about Bill.

"Yeah," one character admits, "but was it enough to murder him for?" That is precisely what the player must figure out as he tries to untangle the hurt emotions and the guilt, the deceptions and the red herrings, and the motivations of everyone involved in Robbins' life.

Frankly, players won't receive much help in their attempts to piece together the events of that tragic night. The prosecutor wants evidence, hard evidence, and the crime lab will only tell the player what he has already figured out or explain the evidence which he has already brought in. In addition, the police library is almost useless. Players will only find a few seemingly unrelated stories there.

Of course, as everyone discovers quickly enough, nothing among the people one speaks with in Liberty City is unrelated and therein lies both one of the biggest faults of the game and one of its greatest strengths.

"Tell 'em about da choices, Dennis!"

Murder Club is menu-driven and flows much like Journey or A Mind Forever Voyaging through selections which pop up as Detective Harold uncovers important information or performs certain acts. Though the graphics do include a rough map of the city, there are only a few places where the detective can go (accessed through the menus), only certain people who can be questioned, and only a few specific items which can be mentioned to them. Thus, irrelevant locations are left out; whimsical or impulsive acts are basically impossible; and, with the lack of invention, away flies any suspension of disbelief or sense of the world inside the machine which is so important to the more successful computer games.

Also lost, is the simulation of reality which the game seems to try so hard to create. Not simply an adventure story, Murder Club very vividly recreates the need for footwork—research and conversation—which lies at the heart of any police investigation. As in real-life sleuthing, most of the game is hard work—which is, in turn, both a blessing and a curse.

Murder Club is indeed a pleasant change to the usual shoot-'em-up, gather all the goodies type games. It does, at least, offer a chance for players to pretend they are smarter than the bad guys and imagine for a brief time that they are perceptive enough to be a detective. Imagine, that is, until they realize that it is impossible to go wrong. As long as the players direct the detective to talk to everyone possible and to search every location available, it is virtually impossible not to resolve the situation.

Murder Club becomes a race to talk to everyone before the player falls asleep from the repetition of key-pecking. Search warrants, arrest warrants, etc. will all be doled out when the detective (Continued on page 95)

GOOD KNIGHT, SWEETPrince

Broderbund's "Prince of Persia"
by Charles Ardai

Prince Valiant

The Sultan is away, fighting to keep barbarian feet on the proper side of the Tigris, and wouldn't you just know, his most trusted Grand Vizier has seized the throne. That dirty rat Jaffar's also seized the Sultan's daughter and demanded that she marry him. She's got an hour to say yes or to join her lover in the palace prison and in a death sentence.

Speaking of her lover (let's call him 'Errol Flynn,' just to pick a name at random), he's an ordinary guy, a wanderer from a foreign land who came to Persia and managed to steal the princess' heart. Only now he's underground and swordless, with a dungeon to escape from, a palace to infiltrate, a heavily guarded tower to conquer, and an hour to do it in. Three guesses which character you get to play.

Lots of things could kill our man Errol—a sword-blow, a three-story fall, impalement on a bed of spikes—but, wonder of wonders, a push of a button will fill his mangled corpse with life once more. This power of resuscitation is unlimited and extremely handy. There's nothing like a quick resurrection to take the sting out of losing a fight.

The time limit, on the other hand, is not up for debate. An hour is an hour is an hour. At the end of an hour, Jaffar will track Errol down and kill him. Needless to say, when Jaffar kills someone, he stays dead.

In effect, then, Errol's enemy is Time Himself, the great foe of the old-time poets and of anyone stuck in rush-hour traffic. The old boy's got a labyrinth of chambers, hallways and ledges to explore; portcullises to lift; pits to leap; turbaned swordsmen to kill. . . and all this in a real-time hour. Isn't that cutting it a bit close?

No, says the game's 'User's Guide'. "Don't be afraid to explore, and to experiment. After all, you've got nothing to lose except your life, the Princess, and the entire Kingdom."

Gee, thanks.

Jordan vs. Persia: One Thousand And One

Never mind that a Sultan rules over a Sultanate, not a Kingdom.

Never mind that it makes no sense to have guards in a dungeon like this (How do they get there? How do they go home at night if the blasted thing's inescapable? How do they get food?)

Never mind that the Sultan, who is off killing foreigners, would probably prefer to see his daughter married to Jaffar than to a rascally foreigner who's just killed several dozen of his best guards and his Grand Vizier.

I mean, really, did those old Thief of Baghdad movies make sense? The point is, they were loads of fun and Prince of Persia is loads of fun, too. You want logic, too? Prince of Persia is the brainchild of Jordan Mechner, the young author of Karateka. Curiously, Prince has less in common with Mechner's earlier game than with a much earlier Broderbund offering, The Castles of Dr. Creep. In that game, players explored rooms patterned after movies such as Frankenstein and Dracula. Here, players explore rooms patterned after Ali Baba and The Arabian Nights.

Both games are characterized by an abundance of mechanical puzzles ("Which tile do I step on to raise the gate?", "How can I reach that ledge?", and so forth), as well as opulent, atmospheric graphics. Both also feature appropriate mood-enhancing soundtracks, though Dr. Creep's Brahms is a shade better than Francis (nepotism alert!) Mechner's merely serviceable work in Prince.

The maze of rooms is extremely well-constructed in both games, giving players plenty to explore and plenty of apparent dead-ends to get themselves out of. However, Prince of Persia offers something additional (besides being available, which Dr. Creep is not). To quote the package, "[Mechner] breaks new ground with animation so uncannily human it must be seen to be believed." This would be the height of marketing arrogance if it weren't, quite simply, true.

Working from "hundreds of movie clips" and the digitized poses of three live models, Mechner has crafted the

December 1989
Now Shooting On Location.

Cuba. Syria. West Germany. Now you can visit any of these global powder kegs and unleash 60 tons of lethal firepower.

Welcome to the front lines. Time to rock 'n roll. Steel Thunder™ is the only modern battle tank simulation that puts you behind the controls of four state-of-the-art American battle tanks.

You'll do combat in war zones where East-West tensions run rampant. Assume the roles of Commander, Driver and Gunner, then choose your weapon — the M48A5 Patton Battle Tank, the M60A3 Main Battle Tank, the M3 Bradley Cavalry Fighting Vehicle or the devastating M1A1 Abrams Main Battle Tank.

Fight 24 day and night battles in three theaters of operation. Master authentic firing sequences and follow actual military land strategy. Rumble over rugged enemy landscapes at 70 mph. Eye-ball Soviet armor through thermal gun sights. Blow kisses to the Eastern Bloc with six authentic weapons systems — including TOW-2 missiles.

America's four best battle tanks vs. Russia's top combat armor. Three of today's crisis regions. This is the kind of simulation that makes the Pentagon sweat.

How to order: Visit your favorite retailer or call 800-245-7744.

ACCOLADE
The best in entertainment software.
player gets to fire guns and missiles and drop oil slicks to shake pursuing cars, there are many other driving games on the market, and most are, at least, as good as this one. A sense of repetition is further heightened by the placement of the second driving sequence immediately after the first.

The hang-gliding segment suffers from the most awkward controls of the game—it is almost impossible to aim the guns and, as in real life, the hang-glider is difficult to steer laterally without a dangerous loss of altitude. It doesn't help that this is the very first segment in the game, nor that the objective isn't clear. Is Wolf supposed to shoot down the enemy hang-giders (he does have a gun, after all)? Is he supposed to evade them or simply land somewhere in particular? The hang-glider sequence gets the game underway on a strange, uncertain note.

Piloting the stealth bomber, on the other hand, is the game's climactic challenge. It isn't easy either, but one wouldn't want it to be. The controls are simpler than the real thing but complex enough to give the simulation some depth. This segment comes off well.

By far the best segments, however, are the two most unusual, where the player actually gets to participate in hands-on, non-vehicular, movie action. First, after bailing out of an exploding plane without a parachute, Wolf has to catch the freefalling villain who does have one. Then, he has to steer the parachute so that he lands on a truck passing on the highway beneath him. The animation will probably be smoother, the controls more responsive, the options more extensive, and the world of the simulation better developed. The inevitable result of trying to package several different simulations in one product is that none are as good as they might be. It is very much to Dynamix's credit that all the sequences are as good as they are.

The scene opens on a well-fed, goateed villain issuing instructions for David Wolf's elimination. Cut to the opening credits, which are set against a backdrop of slick silhouettes: a sports car, a spyplane, a sexy woman. As the credits end, a male silhouette walks on-screen and the female silhouette spins, walks across the screen, and embraces him. Think "James Bond". David Wolf, Secret Agent wants very badly to be a James Bond movie. All the elements are there: the tuxedo-clad man of action who is quick with a gun, a woman, or a wry one-liner; the agent's solid, anxious Director who lays out the scenario; the beautiful, kidnapped scientist; the megalomaniac villain with plans to hold the White House hostage; the henchmen and thugs; on the contemporary battlefield is fatal!! Use it early and use it often!!

Platoon Formation: Learn to use platoon formations and when not to. Generally, it is more beneficial to leave a covering force ("You move, I'll cover!") and use bounding overwatch. However, while the platoon leader can give orders to all four tanks, one must issue orders separately when the formation is split. Move, regroup, move again, and use terrain to maximize cover and concealment (cover affords protection from enemy fire, while concealment merely hides one from enemy observation). While placing one's tank in hull defilade position, remember to adjust the other tanks individually. In a line formation, while tank 1 may be perfectly positioned, but other tanks may be too far forward or back. Therefore, one must shift to each tank and place it in the most advantageous position. Finally, do not give the "Fire at Will" command prematurely. Tankers have a tendency to use up ammunition quickly and the computer is no exception.

Use of Artillery: Artillery fires can be quickly brought to bear. However, M1 does not allow shifting of fires or pre-selected firing points. Once a target is selected, it will be engaged until the artillery unit has executed its fire mission. In a mobile battlefield, this can occasionally prove non-optimal. Finally, do not give the "Fire at Will" command prematurely.

Conclusion

There is no question that M1 Tank Platoon is the best armor simulator currently available on the market. A richly-faceted gaming experience, it does portray the interdependence of the various combat arms. Playable upon different levels (individual or platoon), its campaign options offer hours of entertainment. [Ed: The outside tank view provides some of the most thrilling views of game play we have ever seen in a computer game. It is nothing short of outstanding!]

Stick it in your ear.

For all the sounds you hear when you're playing a game, there are probably as many you don't. Our engineers tell us it isn't so much a reflection on your ears as it is on your computer. They also tell us it's easily corrected.

The new Roland LAPC-1 tone generator and intelligent MIDI interface provides IBM-PC and compatible users with a humongous selection of both instrumental and percussion timbres, as well as sound effects—all courtesy of the same legendary L/A Synthesis you'll find on our MT-32 Multi-Timbral Sound Module.

There's something else our engineers tell us, namely how quickly you can connect an LAPC-1 to your stereo. The record is 45 seconds. We think you can beat it. Roland Corp US, 7200 Dominion Circle, Los Angeles, CA 90040-3647 213685-5141

System Requirements: IBM-PC/XT/AT or compatible, minimum 256k RAM
When the lead Panther was impaled on Dan’s sights, he triggered his large laser. As sheets of armor vanished from the ‘Mech’s right flank, the Panther twisted to the left to protect its wounded side and then ducked back beneath cover.

—Michael A. Stackpole, Warrior: Riposte

MechWarrior doesn’t actually use “golden” crosshairs, but it does utilize an extremely intuitive targeting system. When the player sees shapes moving at a distance, he simply hits the “Enter” key and a green rectangle will appear on the screen, surrounding an enemy ‘Mech or installation (Note: If he "targets" a friendly ‘Mech by mistake, the user-friendly simulation provides a double rectangle to alert the player to potential disaster). This allows him to target that enemy or hit the “Enter” key yet again in order to move to a different target. If he is uncertain as to whether he has effectively targeted his opponent, he can “zoom in” an additional two magnifications. This simulates the work of the sensors present within every BattleMech. Should the sensors be damaged, the MechWarrior will find himself “blind” while the battle continues unabated all around him.

Strategies in MechWarrior are actually rather straightforward. As in the boardgame, the first tactical rule (as well as Rules #2-#4) is “Never Stand Still” (noted in "Battle ‘Mech Tactics" by Steve Kerry in Breakout! magazine, March-May, 1988). Also, a la the boardgame, lighter ‘Mechs will want to use their speed to get behind the medium and heavy machines in order to blast away at their weaker back armor with impunity.

So, you take a proven classic, add a new and exciting twist, and what have you got? Living Jigsaws - the animated jigsaw puzzle game. Not only is it a successful translation of a traditional game into computer software, it adds an element of surprise that both enhances and improves the original. Imagine picking up jigsaw pieces that change as you try to place them, characters and objects move from one to another as you position them, waterfalls cascade, walls seem to vibrate with color, and a mysterious wizard blows bubbles into an illusory scene. It's an intriguing enhancement, a fascinating premise, and with the quality of artwork this package contains, it is a stunning success.

Various levels and voluminous help capabilities make this imminently playable by all age levels; make it as easy or as challenging as you choose.

$39.95. For IBM or compatibles & Tandy computers. CGA, EGA, MCGA. Tandy graphics. Available at your local retailer or order direct from Electronic Arts Direct Sales at 1-800-245-4525.

Is UFO For Real?

SubLOGIC Flings a Flying Saucer Simulator At Us

by Daniel Hockman

What do you do when you have the most incredible flight simulation program? The one that has set the standard for the whole industry? If you want to make more money, you might try to clone it into a few games/simulations that use the same award winning technology. Right? Well, that's what SubLOGIC is trying to do with two new releases: UFO and Flight Simulator A.T.P. (Air Transport Pilot). The latter product is scheduled for a December release. The former was released in late October.

UFO is a very interesting idea for a computer game. You are in command of an alien flying saucer. Your goal is to harvest Q-energy (rare throughout most of the galaxy but, wouldn't you just know it, common on earth!). Q-energy is found in population centers and particularly in sizable buildings. Oddly enough the documentation omits an important fact that game play is built upon: Q-energy is released when humans experience fear. Thus, your task is to terrorize the populations of large cities (especially in large buildings where people are concentrated) so as to raise the fear level and harvest the resulting Q-energy. It's a lot of fun to watch the UFO in the demo program terrorize Washington D.C. You watch as little colored balls (representing Q-energy) slowly drift up to the UFO from the White House and the Pentagon. The gang at SubLOGIC certainly do have a sense of humor.

There are two games in UFO: "Energy Trader" and "Earth Craft Chase". Energy Trader is pretty much described in the preceding paragraph. In Earth Craft Chase you are given a limited amount of time to follow and terrorize a number of human aircraft. You get points by following close and even more points if you can successfully "scoop" them up with your graviton tractor beam. Be careful not to turn the beam up too high or you might destroy the aircraft (messy!). There is a certain sinister glee one has when you start chasing a fear ridden human pilot all over the sky. And you just know what he's thinking when you turn your craft skyward and shoot out of the atmosphere in mere seconds.

Speaking of leaving the atmosphere, part of the game is played in low earth orbit (where your mothership is parked, 240 klaks (.94 klaks equal 1 mile) above Southern Florida. The views of the U.S. you get from here are spectacular (see photo).

Unfortunately, this is a very frustrating part of the game. Docking with the mothership is a bear. To be frank, I have only succeeded twice in dozens of attempts (and I consider myself pretty dextrous at these things). Even when I pay the 1500 energy unit penalty which allows me to transport to anywhere in the U.S. (in this case the threshold of the mothership's docking bay), I rarely can get that blasted craft to successfully dock. It is a real challenge. Beyond the problems with learning (if ever) to dock your craft is the fact that you will have to spend several hours just learning to get around. A flying saucer does not fly in the same fashion as all those flight simulators you have played before. The aerodynamics are different. The game accurately reflects this. Therefore you will have to learn some new skills. Using a mouse provides the best control. Learning to fly the ship will be a challenge for some; for others, a distracting frustration.

Obviously the scenery in UFO comes from the SubLOGIC Flight Simulator scenery modules. Four of the most detailed scenery areas from SubLOGIC's scenery library are used in the game as the four most concentrated areas for Q-energy (Miami, Washington D.C., San Francisco, Hawaii). Thus most of the game will be played in areas of highly detailed scenery (isn't that a nice coincidence?). Don't expect much from other areas. Outside of the four major Q-energy sources you will get little more than city boundary polygons. Not even Chicago (the highly detailed starting point in subLOGIC's Flight Simulators) gets decent treatment. No buildings, no O'Hare International, no Meigs Field! No nothin' (just a Chicago shaped flat polygon). What a letdown!

Conclusions

UFO needs an option for easy mothership docking and some generic buildings for each of the urban areas.

I wanted to like this game. It has very colorful graphics (the cockpit screen is vibrant), the views from space are spectacular, and the idea behind the game is not only unique (a rare enough occurrence in this hobby), it is fun and engaging. But the difficulty in docking the spacecraft coupled with the fact that most U.S. cities are nothing more than flat polygon terrain left me disappointed.

On the other hand, the game is unique. There is nothing else like it on the market. If you want something different, can live with polygon cities, and are willing to tackle some truly difficult flight demands you might want to give UFO a try.
Go back through time into mysterious, distant lands, alive with conflict, intrigue and passion. Koei products transport you to real countries with a real past. Your survival and conquest will take valor and discretion, battlefield guts and financial finesse, heavy handed rule and gentle diplomacy.

Huge databases, gorgeous graphics and a friendly user interface make Koei historical simulations a joy to play.

The newly appointed Minister of War has seized all imperial authority, and rules the Empire with malicious glee. Those who oppose him are branded and exiled. The Emperor, reduced to a shadow in his own palace, has one last chance to restore order and justice...you. But Gao Qiu, the evil Minister of War, will use his considerable power to destroy you unless you get to him first. And if things weren’t bad enough, the northern border is swarming with barbarians, bent on taking the Empire’s riches for their own.

smoothest animation ever seen in a game of this type. Errol runs, he creeps, he leaps and ducks, he hangs by his fingertips—and he looks like a real person doing it. Jaffar and the princess, who are seen in animated sequences throughout the game, turn and strut, cry, shake fists, make dramatic gestures—and they look like real people doing it. Playing Prince of Persia will simply spoil you for any game whose designers couldn’t be bothered to put this much effort into their product. There’s no new technology here, just imagination, elbow grease, hours at the keyboard and TLC. Jordan Mechner deserves all the praise he’s going to get for this one.

Prince of Persia succeeds at being more than a running-jumping game (in other words, a gussied-up Nintendo game) because it captures the feel of those great old adventure films. In reality, a running-jumping game is what it is (there’s a good deal of sword combat, too), but within that genre, Prince of Persia is a tremendous achievement. Make no mistake. Prince of Persia is the lightest of light entertainment. There’s no great brain-drain here and no social commentary. But what people too often forget is how difficult it is to be ‘merely’ entertaining and just how much fun ‘light entertainment’ can be. Star Wars was light entertainment, after all, and Prince of Persia is the Star Wars of its field.

APBA PRO BOWLING: If watching WBF bowling tournaments is your favorite Saturday afternoon activity, this product might be for you. Ten-pin fanatics can choose 2-4 professional bowlers from a list of 48, set up a match, tourney, even an entire season, and watch them bowl it out. The pros will play their game, each with their individual strengths and weaknesses, and will nearly duplicate their actual life-time results. It's useful for recreating a season, but there isn't much "game" to it. IBM. Circle Reader Service #7.

APBA PRO LEAGUE FOOTBALL: The classic board game (played since 1958) comes to the computer. Players can coach face-to-face, against the computer, or just watch the game unfold in this stat-based football game. The game comes with all the bells and whistles you'd expect from APBA, and even includes a season stat compiler for league freaks. IBM. Circle Reader Service #8.

THE DARK HEART OF UUKRUL: Players enter the underground city of Eriosthe and must fight their way through the twisty mazes that hide the tyrant Uukrul and his evil minions. The usual assortment of weapons and armor combine with some interesting magic and prayers to add lots of depth to this role-playing adventure. Auto-mapping, graphic tactical combat, and puzzles enrich the game. Apple II family (128K) ($49.95). Circle Reader Service #10.

LICENSE TO KILL: 007 is out for revenge in this action game that closely follows the movie. Players track down Sanchez the drug kingpin, fighting him with attack-copters, planes, and tankers, and performing typical Bond feats like water-skiing on bare feet and making an in-flight jump from a helicopter to a plane. Just another day in the Queen's Service. IBM ($29.95). Circle Reader Service #11.

JOAN OF ARC: SIEGE AND THE SWORD: Return to the days of the Hundred Year's War and take the throne of Charles VII of France. Can you change history and rid the land of traitorous French dukes and the hated English? At first glance, this product looks much like a Defender of the Crown clone, yet it turns out to be a much more detailed strategy game with an interesting diplomacy element (and some very tough action sequences)

NET TREK: This intriguing multiplayer game allows several trekkies to have a friendly exchange of phaser blasts on an AppleTalk network. It's every captain for himself as each commands one of three types of starships using a very simple thrust-brake-fire command interface. The main objective is to be the first to deploy starbases in all nine galaxies in the game, though a secondary goal might be to vaporize the cocky captain on terminal #4. The game can also be played solo, though the computer opponent doesn't appreciate your nasty ship-to-ship messages as much as a human opponent might. Mac ($59.95). Circle Reader Service #27.

MechWarrior

In MechWarrior, though, there are some nice refinements. All the 'Mechs in the simulation have an AWS (Automatic Weapon System). This beauty opens up an incredibly devastating tactic, Peterson's Prodigious Punch-out (used by boardgame guru and author of the documentation, Steve Peterson). To use this tactic, one simply leaves every potential weapon hooked to the AWS; lines up the crosshairs on one of the enemy 'Mech's legs; and hits the "Tab" key. This fires every weapon at the player's disposal in sequence, faster than the player himself possibly could, until that point at which the heat build-up shuts down the reactor long enough for it to cool down.

Another advantage of the AWS is to link all the weapons except the short range missiles and machine guns to it. Then, one can use the relatively inexpensive lasers to range in on the enemy as he closes range. In this way, one doesn't expend ammunition which has both a limited range and must be replenished at a cost to the player until it is certain to have some impact on the battle.

Irritation shot through the field commander's voice. "Harkness bought it when he marched his Marauder into a Liao militia ambush. They had inferno rockets and roasted him alive."

Alanna felt as if an icy dagger had been thrust into her stomach. What a way to die! Inferno rockets exploded just before they hit their targets, covering a 'Mech or building with a jellied fuel that burned like hell itself. The heat buildup was enough to render a 'Mech inoperable. Alanna shot a glance at her own heat monitors and felt a cold trickle of sweat run down her spine.

---Michael A. Stackpole, Warrior: Coupe.--

Some hardcore Battletech aficionados will feel like MechWarrior is not complete enough. For example, they will point out that there are no inferno rockets in the game. Further, they will be disappointed that some 'Mechs like Valkyrie, Centurions, Spiders, Hunchbacks, Wolfhounds, Ostsols, and Crusaders are not included (However, the design team plans to develop a sequel with more 'Mechs should this product prove successful). They will undoubtedly lament the inability to customize one's 'Mechs within (Continued on page 79)

Face Off with “The Great One”

Wayne GRETZKY HOCKEY

Greatness isn’t awarded, it’s earned.

Wayne Gretzky has spent thousands of hours on the ice, practicing his skating, passing, and shooting skills. He’s earned his reputation as the dominant force in professional ice hockey today.

At Bethesda Softworks, we’ve spent countless hours developing WAYNE GRETZKY HOCKEY. We’ve captured the strategy, the game play and the hard-hitting action of major league hockey. And we deliver a dynamic simulation that recreates the action on the ice and the strategy from the bench. From the adrenaline rush of a breakaway goal to the tension of Sudden Death Overtime, it’s all here.

WAYNE GRETZKY HOCKEY.
You’ll discover that we’ve earned our reputation too.

the bounds of the simulation. Yet, they will be missing the point. MechWarrior is so easy-to-use, fast-to-play, and absolutely mesmerizing in its presentation that it forces the player to suspend his/her disbelief like no previous product. I literally shuddered when the cockpit view shook from enemy attacks. I personified those enemy 'Mechs and shouted derisive unprofessional epithets at them as we engaged in battle. I hung my head in shame when the "Defeat" screens admonished me and I lifted my hands "Rocky"-style when the "Victory" screens offered their glorious accolades. In short, I found myself booting the game and fighting through a mission during every spare moment. I've played it for minutes and I've played it for hours. It wears extremely well.

Whether you are already a fan of the Battletech universe or you are simply looking for the next "hot" simulation, you should consider MechWarrior. If you're not a fan, MechWarrior will make you one. If you already are a fan of Battletech, it will rejuvenate your enthusiasm for a fascinating science fiction universe.

Mean Streets
An Interactive Detective Movie

It's the year 2033. Your name is Tex Murphy, private investigator in San Francisco. You've been hired by the beautiful daughter of a university professor to uncover the facts about her father's death.

As you begin your investigation, you uncover the deaths of several prominent members of the scientific community. Are these deaths coincidental, or is something more sinister going on?

- You will interact with more than 27 characters which animate and respond to questions, bribes and threats.
- Some characters actually talk. This spectacular effect is achieved by synchronizing digitized animation with Real Sound™.
  - You'll crack high-tech security systems.
  - You'll rummage through offices, warehouses, and factories as you search for vital clues.
  - You'll risk your life in action-packed shootouts.
  - You'll fly to major cities along the west coast in your Lotus speeder. This land and air vehicle is a full 3-D solid-fill flight simulator.

Mean Streets features Real Sound™, our own proprietary technology that allows MS-DOS computers to play high quality digitized sound effects, music and speech WITHOUT HARDWARE.

rule, general wind patterns in the Pacific basin favor the Japanese player by allowing his carriers to continue to steam toward their objective while launching aircraft, whereas American carriers must turn away from the advancing Japanese fleet to come into the wind envelope for flight operations. Indeed, every aspect of the game seems weighted in favor of the Japanese, despite the historical outcome. It is possible to recreate history, but it requires a lot of patience and no small measure of good old luck.

Overall, General Quarters Software has succeeded in providing war gamers an inexpensive way to strive for a miracle. Midway is a fine achievement for the fledging firm, offering challenging (if not balanced) game play, smooth operation, adequate graphics, and a very strong computer opponent. It is certainly worth the purchase price.

 hack n' slash gaming. It is a great sequel to a great game.

Game Hints

The following information was purchased from a Humna Humnan ambassador by Capt. Johnson of the Interstel Corporate Police [Known on Earth as Greg Johnson, lead designer of the Starflight series]. Rumor has it, the captain paid dearly for these precious tidbits; including a few hundred meters of Shyneum, several Running Fungi, and a crewmember to be named later. (Note: Commanders who wish to eschew hints should skip this section.).

Getting off to a good start:

- Class 1 armaments are useless and will only get you into trouble. The money tied up in them would be better used as trading capital. Sell them.
- It doesn't hurt to swallow that pride and be OBSEQUIOUS with some sentients, especially the Tandelou.
- Recommending planets is a great way for the more adventuresome captains to gain some working cash. Check out the class M system next to starport and the class M system at the Top of the Wee Dipper.
- According to the chatter on the Humna Humna com-lines, hefty profits can be earned by trading Tandelouian Happy Juice to the Teeelven (downspin edge of the cloud). While there, you can lasso a few eight-legged rhino and sell them for some petty cash.
- A good set of thrusters can keep you out of trouble. Work on obtaining class 5 engines first. If you keep your nose out of trouble, you really shouldn't need armor and weaponry until later.

Staying alive with mature crews:

- A handy little gadget is the Encounter Scan, produced by the Humna Humna in a back-water star system somewhere in the area of 237, 88. You might want to bring a little LiveLong for PR purposes.
- Jump pods can save travel time and fuel. They're a bit risky unless you know the trick. Their accuracy is related to the level of gravity in the target area. Select your destination as close as possible to as many stars as possible. The middle of a cluster is best, but not directly on top of a star.
The Humna Humna have the most useful info (as this list shows). Visit them in their sector in the Downspin, Coreward corner. Obliging their request will make them friendlier, but refusing will not upset them.

Avoid travel in the Cloud, it's rather nasty in there.

When you enter an encounter with an alien vessel, the first thing you should ALWAYS do is maneuver away from them until you are at a safe distance. This will give you much more reaction time if they decide they don't like the color of your starship.

If you acquire a G'nunk crew member, be "Hostile" every now and again in communications to keep her happy and don't ever be Obsequious.

and the international locations, including the obligatory casino. Dynamix has imitated one of the most successful movie formulas of all time and, at first, they seem to have done it well. The first scene (preceding the hang-glider segment) is tightly written and crackles with wittier dialogue than we've seen in the last three Bond films. The actors are well-cast for their roles, and the sets are convincing. David Wolf comes off as a grade-A production. Unfortunately, the initial level of the dialogue doesn't last. What starts as genuine, refreshing wit ends up at a surprisingly low level (calling the villain "Mr. Fatso" as a half-pun on the name "Vasto," for instance). When the script tries to be funny, it usually is, but when it tries to play it straight, it ends up being funny anyway. In the way James Bond plots become increasingly comical in proportion to how serious they try to be. Here, however, the viewer isn't certain how to take the material. Is it a parody of James Bond (which is, by now, self-parodic), as a straight comic adventure (imitation Bond as opposed to parody), or as a serious thriller. It is hard to take the strictly formula plot seriously, but several of the scenes suggest that one is supposed to. I suspect that the screenwriters never quite decided which direction to take, and hoped to be able to do a little of each. This can't possibly work. You can't both parody a genre and, at the same time, place yourself firmly within that genre, because the resulting self-parody looks embarrassingly unwitting. Certainly, you can't do this and expect to be taken seriously. Here, however, the viewer isn't certain how to take the material. Is it a parody of James Bond (which is, by now, self-parodic), as a straight comic adventure (imitation Bond as opposed to parody), or as a serious thriller. It is hard to take the strictly formula plot seriously, but several of the scenes suggest that one is supposed to. I suspect that the screenwriters never quite decided which direction to take, and hoped to be able to do a little of each. This can't possibly work. You can't both parody a genre and, at the same time, place yourself firmly within that genre, because the resulting self-parody looks embarrassingly unwitting. Certainly, you can't do this and expect to be taken seriously. Airplane! couldn't ask us to take seriously its disaster plot and Young Frankenstein didn't try to make viewers cry over the monster's plight, but this is what the designers of David Wolf seem to be doing.

So, while the casting is first-rate, the performances are not. Rather, they are loaded with goofy, exaggerated gestures and expressions. All the actors seem to be stepping outside their roles, as though to say, "We know this is a formula movie, we're not fools." Or worse: "This isn't a movie, it's only a computer game."

Let's face it: Goldfinger can't know he's an exaggeration; Lt. Frank Drebin can't know he's a buffoon; and actors can't let on that they know their characters are anything less than real people. David Wolf's actors are never submersed in their roles. It is clear that they don't take the story seriously, so how can we?

This is not to say that there is nothing to enjoy after the first scene. Wolf's briefing is well-written and juicy; the payoff to the freefall sequence (which is given away on the package) is nice; the launching of the stealth bomber is capped by a clever bit of action; and there's always Kelly's bondage scene, if you're into that. Besides, all of the scenes (I calculate about a half-hour of "footage," total) are fun to watch just for the sheer joy of seeing digitized images on your PC.

Alas, the sheer joy wears thin after a while, and neither the action nor the movie is strong enough to rescue David Wolf. What Dynamix has done with David Wolf, Secret Agent has probably taken the genre about as far as it can go. Unfortunately, the problem is that the genre makes for games that you won't want to play or watch twice. Despite this inherent limitation, David Wolf is unique and worth a look for only one reason: it is visually stunning and executed with flair.

so much running one can do; eventually, fighting becomes necessary. The trick is to take on the weaker opponents, those you have a fair chance of defeating with bare hands. Soldiers and guards do not fall into this category! Born losers might be a better choice.

Combat is totally menu-driven. When a confrontation occurs, a picture of the closest foe is displayed on the left, and a main option menu comes up on the right. This is where you choose to Fight, Run, or Advance. Advancing moves the party forward ten feet. Running causes each party member to flee individually. This can be dangerous in close combat, as some monsters may be faster than some characters and hence, get in a shot or two as they run away. Fighting, of course, brings up a sub-menu of choices for each character, one at a time. Essentially, you can attack, dodge, block, cast a spell, use an item, run, or move forward or back in line. Additional sub-menus appear when "Attack" or "Cast a spell" is chosen. Casting a spell requires the most decisions, as you must choose the type of magic, the type of spell, and finally, the spell itself. While this is a lot to wade through, familiarity makes it go faster, especially since you only need to type in the first letter of each choice (plus return). Also, you will probably have a small selection of favorite spells to use in combat, thus casting can go very quickly indeed. When there is more than one group of opponents, you also have a choice as to which one you want a particular character to attack. Range (which is given) is extremely important here, both for spells and distance weapons such as bows. Different spells have different range limits, so keep the manual handy to make sure you aren't wasting magic on someone unreachable. The same holds true for distance weapons; i.e. a long bow can shoot farther than a regular bow. As you experiment with different ranged weapons, you will learn what the optimums are for each one.

Health is always important and, once all combat choices have been made, the menus are replaced by the names of the characters with bar graphs beneath them. The first bar, in red, represents hit points. Should this reach zero, the character is dead (and you can be dead a long time in this game). The second bar, in green, shows stun. If this goes down to zero, the character is alive but unconscious. He can be revived during combat with a healing spell or potion. Should none be available (or there's no time to use one), the character is restored fully (as far as stun goes) when combat is over. A character always takes stun damage when hit, and stun is always twice the physical injury. Thus a blow that causes three points of damage on the red bar will do six on the green bar. In many cases, a character will drop from stun damage instead of death. The third bar, in blue, appears only for mages, and measures how much magical energy remains for spell-casting. If this goes to zero, or close to it, that character is unable to cast spells. Magical energy does not regenerate automatically; you need a dragonstone or magic pool to restore it. Should the entire party become stunned, it is not the end. You are simply turned around and moved away from the combat square, just as though you had run. Physical damage remains, but the stun bars are renewed, and everyone (who didn't die in combat) is still alive. Of course, if everyone does die, you'll have to restore to your last save and try again.

In this game, death is even more necessary to avoid than in other games. There are no spells, no handy temples, no wandering priests to bring back the deceased. There is one, and only one, place where resurrection is possible. It is not easy to reach or find. Should someone die, my recommendation is to restore the game, because you need all the people you can get.

Magic, as you've probably guessed by now, is no longer a case of "nuke 'em till they glow". Those days are over. Combat spells are much more restrained. The majority of the group-effect spells do a maximum of 24-36 points of damage. There are a few spells which can be more potent, by virtue of the points put into them (Inferno comes to mind as an example), but don't expect to find anything of god-like power (even if you get it from a god). This is true of goodies in the game as well. There are many neat things out there, waiting for your hot little hands, but you won't be stumbling over swords (+50) or armor (+90), since there aren't any. Further, combat gives you experience points (and sometimes a little cash). Anything beyond that has to be found. No chests with mega-items will be presented after you slaughter the goblins... or anyone else for that matter. The good stuff is tucked away and you'll just have to ferret it out on your own.

Some of the Neat Things out there are NPC's you can add to the party. Up to three of them can be included in the group (giving you seven characters in all), and you would be wise to take in some extra help. They fight, cast spells, use items, etc., as you direct them to, so there is little difference between them and the regular party members. NPC's also go up in level, just as the characters do, thus they, too, improve over time. In general, the game works very well. Combat is properly balanced, and you will need a mix of muscle and magic in most encounters to prevail.

Treasure is equally balanced. All of it has been placed specifically with no random items in the game. This is a brilliant stroke, as it prevents the "Monty Haul" syndrome, while still providing everything the party needs to complete the game. The designers have been generous, but not outrageous.

Also, there are many subplots in the game, though their overall effect is relatively minor. For example, if you manage to destroy the city of Phoebus, it will not materially affect your chances of success. On the other hand, you certainly won't be able to do anything in Phoebus again, since it isn’t there any more (ah well, this is why we have save games . . .). Still, these various subplots add a great deal to the game. There’s nothing like being drafted into the enemy’s army to make you sit up and take notice! Selling yourself into slavery (horrible thought!) as one way out of Purgatory leads to a simple but complete adventure of its own. It doesn’t change anything, but you’ll certainly have some nervous moments as you sneak around in chains trying to escape. Everything builds to the moment of your final confrontation with Namtar. Make no mistake, this is a mean one. Forget all those wimpy evil-doers who drop dead in the first round of combat. Namtar is one tough customer and you will remember this fight for a long, long time. It is probably the best end-game battle of any CRPG I’ve ever played. Decide that one for yourself when you get there. Those who hate mapping (and they are legion) will rejoice over the auto-map feature. It automatically records all places you have been (unexplored areas are black) and remembers them, as well. Outdoors, indoors, town, dungeon, wherever, the auto-map will faithfully record it for you, along with significant land features (trees, walls, doors, etc). Of course, it only shows your current area. If you’re inside a city, for instance, the map is only of the city. If you’re in the outdoors, the map is of the outdoors, although you will see the landmarks on it (the ones you’ve visited, that is).

The graphics (Apple double hi-res) are excellent. While the monster pictures are not fully animated, they do have movement (some of it quite subtle). Since combat is not in real-time, take a moment when an encounter begins to enjoy the pics (it will probably be the only chance you have to do so). When you’re not fighting, the display shows your current location, with 3D view. On the down side, the most important factor is the lack of conversation. While there are many very nice paragraphs in the manual to read, there is no real dialogue between the characters and people they meet (as one would have in an Ultima or Magic Candle). More interaction is needed in this area. There are some minor annoyances: you don’t know anything about an NPC until you’ve taken him into the party; having items examined at a store reveals nothing about their special powers (if any); if a bow is unequipped, its arrows or bolts are also unequipped; requiring two rounds in combat to re-quip them both.

Fortunately, none of this is very detrimental to playing the game. In spite of a few rough edges, Dragon Wars leaves the "Bard" series in the dust. Tighter design, attention to detail, balanced combat, and a carefully constructed plotline all combine to produce a CRPG well worth playing.

Bottom line: Highly recommended, especially for those tired of hack and slash epics.

The award-winning Fool's Errand is a game like no other. It tells the enchanting story of the fool in his search for wisdom, intertwined with over 80 original puzzles: graphic, word, logic, and more.

Each unique puzzle is woven into the threads of the unraveling story. The puzzles give you pieces of the sun's map. But the map is a puzzle as well. And there are more puzzles that lie hidden in the map.

You figure it out.

And when you do, you will be rewarded with a four-minute animated finale.

You will have earned it.
Murder Club

has talked to the right people, brought in the correct people for questioning, and so forth.

Such cannot be what the programmers intended; indeed, it is very apparent from playing the game that they tried to create a tight world, a single-minded investigator, lots of intrigue, and even double-plotting. All of that is there. It is present in the game. Unfortunately, however, playing Murder Club eventually becomes sort of like playing Ultima III a second time. One takes the necessary steps and tries to pretend that he doesn't already know the secrets to the game.

"Tell 'em about da pictures, Dennis!"

Fortunately, Murder Club augments its deterministic plot with some interesting graphics. Each location has its own scene, but one should be aware that the scene is more of a picture than an interactive environment. Nothing in the picture can be manipulated because, of course, the game is really a text mystery with menus.

Curiously enough—since the pictures are included at all—all almost all of the backgrounds in the scenes are splashed one color: the orange/yellow of "The Hungry Fisherman", for example, or the gray of Dr. Beckert's clinic. If the designers of Murder Club set out to beautify a menu-driven text mystery with graphics and decided to fill three disks in the process, shouldn't they have finished the job and added multiple colors to the scenes?

"Tell 'em da good part, Dennis!"

On the plus side: the mystery is tight, the characters are all plausible, the conversations seem realistic, and the personalities of the characters seem individual. The plot is well-written and offers some depth. The manual is both helpful and clever, as well.

Possibly intended for beginners and players who don't have the patience to finish traditional adventure games, Murder Club is nonetheless not recommended for young minds. Though no sex is involved, many of the emotions the characters reveal may be too destructive and intense for the less mature mindset.

"I Won 8 National Golf Victories On My Home Computer."

— Tom Rohleder, 1988 CSN Player of The Year

Join the Computer Sports Network Pro Tour and compete nationally to win trophies and prizes on famous golf courses.*

CSN’s Tournament Golf and Accolade’s “Mean 18” put you on-line to compete on 42 of the most challenging pro golf courses in the world. Now you can play Pebble Beach, Pinehurst, TPC at Las Colinas, and many more exciting courses in actual competition without leaving your computer. And you can play them at the same time the golf pros are competing in tournaments on network television.

Imagine yourself on the 18th hole at Pebble Beach lining up your final putt of the four round tournament. It has been a week long climb up the leader board and victory is finally within your grasp! The excitement builds and your heart rate quickens at the thought of winning over other CSN golfers across the nation. Sink this putt and your score will win a weekly trophy or prize.

No matter what level your present computer golf skills are, CSN can put you into a flight which will enable you to compete and win against others at your level. So, stop wasting your computer golf scores competing against yourself. Now’s the time to find out how good your skills really are. Put yourself to the test in national competition today. To purchase or for more information call CSN at (800) 727-4636, or visit your software dealer today.

Scorpion's Mail

were a little bigger than a kid). Then again, maybe politeness is becoming a lost art.

Ultima III:

This game is definitely enjoying a revival, going by the increase in mail on it. One problem that seems universal (so to speak) is locating the Mark of the Snake. This is not easy, as there is only one dungeon where the mark may be obtained, and it's not on the main continent. Also, there are several rods at the bottom, which give other marks and may fool people into thinking the snake mark isn't there. So, make sure you tour the dungeon well and try all the rods on the bottom level.

Ultima V:

Some people have asked if you need to have all characters at level eight to finish the game. No, it isn't necessary, although it certainly doesn't hurt (grin). However, if you've done everything else in the game, there's no need to put off the big rescue just because the party members are not at maximum level. Also, in the room below the sandtraps in the final dungeon, you must kill off all the monsters before you can make the bridge appear. Then, of course (hehe), you have to find the trigger for it. Deft hurling of magic axes should do the job.

Neuromancer:

Greystoke is something to be left until late in the game. He (it?) is extremely powerful and you need some heavy-duty stuff to defeat him. So, if you find yourself a week after going up against him, just back off and leave him be for awhile. Eventually, you'll have what you need to do the job.

That's about it for this dip into the mailbag. Fred and I wish you all a very happy holiday season, and may Santa Gru ... err ... Claus bring you all the games you want (all the good ones, anyway! grin). In the meantime, if you need help with an adventure game, you can reach me in the following ways:

- On Delphi: Stop by the GameSIG (under the Groups and Clubs menu). On GEnie: Visit the Games RoundTable (type: Scorpia to reach the Games RT).
- By US Mail (and please remember to enclose a self-addressed, stamped envelope if you live in the United States): Scorpia, PO Box 338, Gracie Station, New York, NY 10028.

Until next time, happy adventuring!

Historical map drawn from 1:100,000 scale maps captured from the Red Army by the Wehrmacht and captured from the Wehrmacht by the Allies.

Magnified scrolling view shows even more detail, including unit ID, unit type, damage, movement expended, and transportation category.

You are on the Russian Front, winter 1942 - 1943. As the German Sixth Army slowly starves in the devastated city of Stalingrad, the Soviets launch a second onslaught. The mission: Encircle and destroy the German garrison entrenched at the vital rail junction of Velikiy Luki. The stage is set for one of the most bitterly fought battles on the Eastern Front.

Historical accuracy, crucial detail, realistic sound effects and advanced personal computer technology combine to make White Death a highly challenging and exciting wargame.

White Death is adapted from the GDW game of the same name which won, in the year it was released, the Game Designer's Guild Award and F&M's Best Operational Game Award.

AUSTIN (CGW) -- The Origin/CGW OMEGA Tournament continues with 48 entrants in the October Monthly Tournament. LASSWAN, designed by Stuart Eastman of Aurora, Colorado took top honors. LASSWAN (clever name, since he was the ‘last one’ on the battlefield) defeated a strong field of competitors by exhibiting aggressiveness with a capital ‘A’. However he knew when to clear out. He slammed on the brakes maintaining a certain level of damage. He then disengaged and went off to do repairs, and returned to create more mayhem. Other October finalists were: from Westminster, Maryland, Donald Cole’s PHANTOM (2nd place: used tactical retreats to his advantage); from Port Coquitlam, British Columbia, Julio MOODYB2 (3rd place: liked clear field of fires; took out a lot of obstacles); from Culver City, California, Chris Bruck's VULTURE (4th place: fights until he is hurt, and then retreats); Trujillo’s MOODYBI (5th place: like his brother, he hates obstacles); and Eastman’s HUNTER (very persistent, he moves with purpose). The designers of each of these cybertanks have earned the right to participate in the Championship Round to be reported in the April issue of Computer Gaming World. Comments from OSI Officials We were very pleased that cybertank engineers participating in the October tournament created much more aggressive tanks this month. Overall, the cyber-tanks seem to outperform their equipment better, and there was a definite increase in the intelligence of the tanks. More intelligent use of terrain will probably be important for future competition. The deadline for submissions to the December monthly tournament is SAM December 28, 1989.
Harpoon

Somewhere in the desolate and freezing wastes of the North Atlantic, between Iceland and the Kola Peninsula, a Soviet battle fleet is lurking, ready to pounce on its prey. As NATO Task Force Commander you must deploy your fleet of submarines, ships, and aircraft to locate, engage and defeat the Kremlin's finest.

Produced by Larry Bond, noted co-author of "Red Storm Rising" and Naval Analyst, Harpoon portrays the superpower's final confrontation. Now it's up to you.

With graphics that make everything else look like finger painting, and an arsenal of weaponry that comes up to your armpits, Harpoon's non-stop action, relentless intensity and chilling responsibility will leave you gasping. It's more than a mere game—it's a current event!

Available now for PC/compatibles. Coming for Macintosh, Apple IIs and Amiga. Contact your software retailer or Three-Sixty, 408/879-9144.

and awe-inspiring clad in a pair of red water-wings?"

The luckless Poseidon is selected, by Zeus, as the first of the gods to prove their worth. The task being to steal Hades' helmet of invisibility from the throne room of the underworld palace. Packed with humor and a selection of quality graphics, Myth might prove to be a fitting farewell.

The above mentioned "Official Secrets" club was set up by Tony Rainbird, the man who founded Rainbird Software (now under the control of Microprose), Tony Rainbird. Upon joining the club (£30.00 in the US) you receive Myth and Gnome Ranger (from Level 9) or a surprise alternative. Bomber (Amiga, ST, PC, C64 - pre-Christmas launch) is causing a stir over here. Developed by Vektor Graftix for Activision, Bomber is a flight simulation which places the emphasis on the action rather than the simulation. Set in the American mid-west, you must fly a tactical ground attack aircraft in an effort to win the coveted Curtis E. Le May Trophy. With a choice of six aircraft (including the Tornado, SAAB Viggen and MiG 27), Bomber is resplendent in solid 3-D graphics which, says Vektor, includes routines to cut the corners out of circles usually found in other, angular, 3-D games. Features include a detailed landscape, in-flight refueling from a KC-10 and DIY missions.

Quest For The Time Bird (QTB—ST, Amiga & PC —available now) comes from the French software house Infogrames. Your quest is to stop the rogue god Ramor from escaping his prison—a conch (no, I don't know why either) and wreaking general havoc. You control up to four characters in this graphic adventure. Controlled, principally, via point-and-click actions and menus, QTB includes quality graphics and atmospheric sound effects.

European Space Shuttle, by France's Cocktel Vision, has similarities to Space M+A+X in that you must, after choosing a mission and organizing a flight plan, launch your Space Shuttle (which looks very similar to the European Hermes project), set up an orbit and build a space station. Apparently, re-entry and landing procedures are also included.

Finally, a few snippets. Argonaut Software and Ocean Software are both developing solid 3-D flight simulators called Aggressor and F-29, respectively. Empire has produced a 3-D RPG where you walk amongst the characters, called Let Sleeping Gods Lie. Finally, German-based Dragonware has released a text/graphic adventure with high quality sound effects called Ooze. Phew!!! See you next month!

Covering The Baseless

I heard a rumor from the Origins game convention that CGW and, at least, one other national game review magazine sells their covers, meaning that for a fee you will feature a particular game on the magazine cover and include a feature article on it. My questions are:
1) Is there any truth to this rumor?
2) Is this a common practice in the industry?
3) Doesn't this practice compromise the integrity of an independent review magazine like CGW?

Jeff Petraska
New Boston, MI

No, no and yes! This baseless accusation began at Origins with an off-handed comment by Chris Cummins, publisher of Fire & Movement and The Wargamer. Chris stated matter of factly that F&M sold their cover. His philosophy is that it is the most valuable space in the magazine. Hence, it is worth the money. This was followed up with a comment that this was, allegedly, a common practice in the industry. In this way, gaming publications who oppose such a compromising mercenary practice were tarred, without evidence, with the same brush of journalistic compromise which F&M gladly admitted to.

The facts are: 1) CGW has never agreed to feature any game on the cover in exchange for direct payment or, even implicitly, in exchange for advertising; 2) we are unaware of publications other than F&M which make this a practice; and 3) we don't even promise a favorable review to companies in exchange for the cover art, since even that could feasibly color a review.

It is even more important to clarify this because we have recently gone to a single cover theme (i.e. Broadswords & Beasts) which make this a practice; implicitly, in exchange for advertising; 2) in exchange for direct payment or, even that could feasibly color a review.

Inadequate Coverage

I think you have the best computer gaming magazine on the market. It is so good that I don't feel it needs scantily clad females on the cover to attract attention. Let's leave the pin-ups to Playboy and stick to computer games. I would hate to have to cancel my new subscription because I am embarrassed to leave your magazine on my coffee table when my friends come over.

Thank you for many hours of entertainment,

William R. Lowry
Bremerton, WA

Sporting Views

Shouldn't CGW have a "Sports" category when rating the games? It seems sad to cram golf, hockey, football and baseball with Hostage and Airborne Ranger.

Actually, it would probably be confusing to have a separate sports category, since there are action games, strategy games and mixed genre games within that category. Currently, for example, NFL Challenge is listed as a strategy game while Jordan vs. Bird is listed as an action game. They each compare better with the games in their respective categories than they would compare with each other in a separate "Sports" category. Where both action and strategy elements are present in a sports game, (i.e. TV Sports Football, Wayne Gretzky Hockey, Jack Nicklaus's golf, and World Class Leader Board, they are listed as both action and strategy games.

The Ties That Bind

When are we going to see some binders for all those back issues that are stacked to the ceiling?

Roger Batchelder
Palm Bay, FL

The official Computer Gaming World back issue binders are currently being manufactured. An official advertisement with full purchasing details will appear in our January issue. They look great and for those who are concerned, there are no scantily clad females on the cover.

Super Oversight

Why are there no super hero role playing games? There is nothing wrong with fantasy, but a change would be nice.

Mark Wilkerson
Austin, TX

Ratings Game

Well, you don't have to do this, but maybe you could give a rating (e.g. graphics (1-10), playability (1-10), sound (1-10) etc.). Actually, the idea is pretty stupid, so scrap it.

Cedric Lo
Vancouver, British Columbia

Actually, the idea isn't stupid. It would be useful information. Unfortunately, the more complicated a survey process becomes, the less actual responses it tends to garner. Since we want as many responses as possible, we'll try to keep it simple. Actually, answering this letter is pretty stupid, so let's forget it.
On the R.I.D. card provided opposite page 4, please rate the following games (if you have played them) and articles (if you have read them) by using a letter grade scale (i.e. A to F). Just rate the games as if you were an educator. As with the world of education, the scale will translate to:

A = Excellent
C = Average
F = Failure

If you wish, you may assign pluses (+) or minuses (-) to your letter grade (i.e. B+, B-, C+, C- etc.). As always, rate only those games that you have played. Remember that thousands of gamers will be making buying decisions based on the results of these ratings, so help your fellow gamer out and let him know what is a worthy purchase and what is not.
